

Comedy Cast Tryouts Set

University Theater To Present 'The Man Who Came To Dinner'

Tryouts for the fourth major University Theater production, "The Man Who Came to Dinner," are being held Monday through Thursday from 3 to 5 p.m. in Room 210, Temple Building.

Dallas Williams, director of the University Theater, announced that a cast of nine women and 15 men will be selected for the Kaufman and Hart comedy.

"The play has good leading parts, and there are innumerable small parts which are delightful characterizations," Williams said.

"I WOULD like to have all regularly-enrolled students try out for the play," he added. He emphasized the fact that experience in acting was not necessary. "We select the best person for the part," Williams stated, "regardless of past experience in acting."

According to Williams, "The Man Who Came to Dinner" is one of the "most hilariously funny plays in America." The play is a parody on the character of Alexander Woollcott. In the play, Whiteside, like Woollcott, is a radio personality and a "literary" man who has come to a small Missouri town to lecture. He is entertained at the Stanley residence but as he leaves, he slips on the front doorstep and breaks his leg.

THE PEACEFUL Stanley household is thrown into chaos by the arrival of Whiteside's weird friends and an even weirder assortment of gifts. Whiteside places an octopus in the basement, entertains pentagons, 10,000 cockroaches loose in the kitchen.

After weeks of domestic turmoil, Whiteside finally recuperates. As he departs triumphantly from the Stanley residence, he slips, falls and breaks his leg.

"The Man Who Came to Dinner" will be presented for eight performances beginning Wednesday, March 31.

All persons interested in working on the production staff of "The Man Who Came to Dinner" may apply Monday through Thursday in Room 312, Temple Building.

Commie Strike Quelled

ROME—Communist general strike in Rome was quelled by armed riot police and at least 60 demonstrators were taken into custody. The aims of the Red-led walkout were to boost wages and to harass the new government of Premier Mario Scelba. Traffic was partially tied up because of the confusion in the streets.

The demonstration was mostly made by students as they marched through the streets carrying banners demanding higher pay and work for the unemployed. Ringleaders of the demonstration were Communists, a police lieutenant said.

The non-Communist Free Federation of Labor, the country's second largest union did not participate in the violence. Mounted officers appeared at strategic centers to guard against trouble for the first time in five or six years.

Seventh Book Published By Poli Sci Professor

Information Gathered At NU-Hill

"Contemporary World Politics" is the title of Norman L. Hill's seventh book on international relations. Hill is a member of the University political science department and professor of international law and relations.

Since the book is of a current nature, Hill said that "it will be lucky if its popular use lasts five or six years." He wrote the text-book, which is being used in political science classes this semester, over an 18-month period in his spare time.

HILL HAS gathered the information for the book since he began teaching international relations at the University in 1926. Additional research was undertaken, however, he said.

Hill stated that "at first I was not inclined to write the book for Harper Brothers, publishers, who published another work of mine two years ago. After much urging, I decided to work on it."

"ALTHOUGH WRITING books is always hard work, the more you write, the easier it becomes," Hill said.

Books Hill has written previously are: "Public International Conferences," "International Administration," "Claims to Territory in International Law and Relations," "International Relations—Documents and Readings" and "International Organization."

'The Nebraskan' Begins 52nd Year At University

First Student-Edited Publication, 'Hesperian Student', Dates Back 82 Years; J.S. Dales, First Editor

Richard V. Koupal, 1916 editor and present executive director of Better Business Bureau of Lincoln, remembers the Daily Nebraskan as an enthusiastic promoter of football.

EDITOR IN 1923 was Belle Bell Farmon, director of the English department in Lincoln High School. She states that she was the first woman managing editor and that reporters were paid for the number of inches they had published, at the rate of 2 cents per inch.

Administrative Assistant to the Chancellor, Bruce Nicoll, recalls the effect of the depression on the paper and students during his 1934 editorship.

J. Edward Murray, 1938 editor and present managing editor of the Los Angeles Mirror, remembers being called before the Board of Student Publications to be lectured because of an editorial which he had written in a rash and undignified manner.

"THE DAILY Nebraskan existed as a 5 column tabloid until the 2nd semester of the 1949-50 school year when it was changed to the present larger 7 column publication.

Only once has "The Daily Nebraskan" won an All-American rating. The rating was received in 1952 when Jo Ann Krueger was editor.

During the second semester of the 1952-53 school year The Daily Nebraskan changed from a five-day to a four-day publication. However, face lifting operations were not completed until the first semester of this school year, when the name was changed to the present "The Nebraskan," and four-day publication changed to a five-day publication. This change was the result of financial difficulties.

EIGHTY-TWO years of publications on the University campus have resulted in varied changes—and who knows what the future holds!

The first student publication of University students, the Hesperian Student, celebrates its eighty second birthday this month. The publication was the "grand-dad" of The Daily Nebraskan, which came into being thirty years later.
