Rainy Day Hobby Begins Career For NU Student

Toothpick Bridge Now On Display Depicts Freshman Engineer's Skill

By BEVERLY DEEPE Staff Writer

One rainy day after school when he could find nothing to do, Robert Cummings sat down with a tube of glue, some toothpicks, a razor blade and one of his mother's old magazines.

Eleven-year-old Cummings' hobby of making small objects from toothpicks began that day and has evolved to making 16 foot bridges from balsa wood.

TODAY, CUMMINGS is a freshman in the College of Engineering. One of his three bridges, made from balsawoods, is on display Basketball fans had been eagerly watching the exploits of brawn and skill by the University gymnastics team during a game's halftime.

Another piece in the collection depicts the story of "The Three Bears" with three chairs, showing different amounts of usage: three bowls of porridge with drops of wax indicating the quantity of porridge left by Goldelocks, and three beds showing various de-

CUMMINGS HAS also made a series of seven chairs which gradually decrease in size. The largwere made by splitting the balsa strips once, making them 1/16 inch by 1/32 inch. A microscope was used to carve the details in the chair.

Cummnings said that he feels his hobby has made him more "accurate, precise, patient and dexterous with his fingers." Sometime in the future he hopes to construct a model of Bayonne Bridge, Bayonne, New Jersey, the longest steel arch-suspension bridge in the world and a windmill with moving parts.
