'Own Pot Of Gold' Produced By 'Finian's Rainbow' Players

By BRUCE BRUGMANN Staff Writer

"Finian's Rainbow" splashed forth in theatrical technicolor Thursday evening as the gay, colorful, and lively of the southern plantation, fairytale and Irish folklore combined to produce not a pot of gold but a more wonderful life overflowing it.

Underneath a few first night kinks, such as faulty timing, poor lighting streaks a somewhat tight and unrelaxed chorus and the rather obvious apparatus of apples, books and other apparatus, the production went off well and promises to even better fulfill expectations Friday and Saturday evening. The story is well-written, the plot entertaining, the acting and singing excellent, but the entire performance could flow more smoothly and the orchestra could have a little more depth and volume.

STARRING IN the initial performance of the Kosmet Klub 1954 Spring Musical were Nick Amos as Woody and Jan Harrison as Sharon. Each turned in a polished, near-professional performance with Amos as his usual smooth, suave self. His voice was strong and his gestures indicated exactly what he wanted to say. Miss Harrison with a credible Irish brogue and a wistful air used her operatic voice beautifully, though it faded in volume many times and did not carry as well as it should have.

The crowd pleaser of the cast was pretty much of a tossup between Marv Stromer in his favorite "old man" role and Hank Gibson as the leprechaun. Each pilfered the scenes when they were on stage. When Gibson and the senator, portrayed excellently by Dick Marrs, were parleying back and forth alone in the reformation scene, the acting neared perfection.

ELAINE HESS and Susan Mahoney, the dancing leads, gave credible performances with Miss Hess gaining special applause for her interpretive dance in which she is trying to hide the elusive pot of gold.

Rathbone, star of stage, radio and screen, will arrive on the University campus Friday for a three-day visit. During his stay he will conduct rehearsal and informal forums and will appear at theory of acting classes at 2 p. m. Friday in the Social Science Building.
