Historical Building Open To All

The State Historical Society, located next to the Union, offers facilities of a library, auditorium and an anthropology laboratory to University students.

The library is open from 8 to 5:30 p.m. on Monday through Saturday and from 2 to 5 p.m. on Sunday for any research in social sciences, journalism, history or anthropology fields. A special anthropology laboratory is available to any interested student.

The auditorium can be reserved for University group meetings by calling Mrs. Winkelman at the Society. Seating capacity is 100 persons, and projection and tape recording machines are available in the auditorium for use anytime.

In addition, the society holds programs about the Historical Society in relation to the State of Nebraska in the auditorium for school students visiting Lincoln from out-of-town.

Exhibits are arranged throughout the building and are changed often, according to major and minor displays. Also, the society is continuing its cooperation with the University on arranging the television programs.

On The Social Side

Pigskin, Parties, Pinnings Brighten Fall NU Weekend

By BARBARA CLARK
Society Editor

University students spent another week-end of social functions and parties. Several sororities and fraternities went to the football game together. Many groups held picnics and hour dances. Open house after the game was held by several groups.

Friday night students attended the Rally Dance. Saturday night Eddy Howard's band played at King's. Several groups went to East Hills Saturday night. Attending the Acacia party at the Hills Saturday were: Joyce Dawson and John Chappell; Marilyn Sheldon and Charles Anderson, and Myrna Moss and Wendel Wertz.

A "Kick-Off Party" was held at the Sammy house Saturday night. Some of the couples attending were: Leah Gittelman and Gerald Crlinc; Connie Platt and Neil Unger, and Mona Smith and Sol Stiss.

Another Saturday night party was held at the Delt house. Some of the Delt's and their dates were: Sis Matzke and Skip Hove; Claudia Allen and Dick Farmer, and Joyce Waller and Ron Danek.

Bogs, Bees, Blisters Hinder Geologists

By LUCIGRACE SWITZER
Staff Writer

Bogs, bees and blisters were just a few of the obstacles facing a group of geology students as they embarked on a field trip Saturday.

Several previous days of rain were responsible for the bogs and apparently for the bees, and several miles of hiking netted the adventurers their badges of honor, blisters.

Some of the students complained that they didn't know whether the bus in which the group traveled was more a help or a hindrance. Because of the muddy roads, on several occasions the bus was forced to park on the highway while the students hiked to their destination. On one such occasion, after what seemed like miles of walking the geologists found that the quarries which they were to see had been filled in.

Rather than return without anything for their efforts, some of the more intrepid elected to hike an additional mile to see some limestone formations. Since they returned too tired to talk, no one ever discovered whether it had been worth while.

Minor Expedition

It was after this minor expedition, roughly comparable to a full scale African safari, that an ex-Marine was heard to proclaim bitterly that "nothing in the Marines ever prepared me for this." Another geologist, who had just been stung by an enraged bee, moaned, "and to think, I once considered being an English major."

Even the hikes did have their compensations, however. The route to one spot was lined with wild plum bushes and many students at the end of the hike announced that he never would have made it if it hadn't been for those plums. Back at the bus, the group sponsor carefully unfolded his handkerchief, while students watched to see what geologic specimens he had found. No specimens — just plums.

Wet and weary the group finally returned to Morrill Hall, with admirable samples of all the varieties of mud known to eastern Nebraska.
