Essential Differences Between Iranian University, NU Disclosed By Student

The essential difference between the University and the University of Teheran (Iran), Mohamed Sam, exchange student from Iran, commented in a Nebraskan interview, is participation in activities and freedom of subject selection. Iranian universities are based on the college level and each college establishes a rigid schedule for each student in that college to follow. Sam explained that the student has no freedom to select the number of hours or the course he wants to take. A student seldom takes courses from another college, he said, in comparing Universities.

The 31-year-old exchange student said this was caused by the distance between various college buildings in the university campus.

Fewer Activities

University activities in Iran are much less varied than they are in Nebraska, the Fulbright scholar observed. Activities are also organized on the college level. Each college in the university publishes its own weekly or monthly magazine. Representatives from each college serve as a link between college administrators and members of the student body in that college.

Dress the Same

Discussing college dress, the former Iranian school administrator said he observed no difference in casual, class-time wear or in formal dress. Boys, he said, wear short-sleeved lip-overs and wool sport pants as they do here, except in the summer when shirt sleeves are the rule.

Bermuda shorts, however, he explained are not worn by Iranian girls. If a girl would wear such attire, she would be "very lowly thought of."

Rural schools in Iran are not as well-equipped as American rural schools and most of the grade schools are taught by male instructors. Iranian schools are rural only in the sense that an agricultural program is offered to the students.

The agricultural program is directed by teachers and supply students with needed equipment. Most of the products grown by students to exhibit at the contests are new products trying to be introduced in the area — such as spinach, sweet corn and lima beans.

Taught 7 Years

Sam taught school for 7 years in Iran and 5 of those years served as superintendent over 72 rural schools located about 30 miles from Teheran. He has been given a one-year leave of absence to study elementary education and teachers training at the University.

Two changes which Sam is going to effect when he returns to Iran are methods of teaching reading and writing and the training of teachers.

NU Library Furnishes Music Aids

By F. JAY PEPPER Staff Writer

A new music room has been opened at Love Memorial Library, Room 306 is furnished with a phonograph, several dozen records and scores to many of the records.

The equipment has all been received from the Music Building, where it was previously housed.

The music room has been established mainly for music students as an aid in their assignment. It will be available 7 1/2 hours a week, as compared to the former two hours a week in the Music Building. In addition, the Library provides greater facilities than the Music Building has.

The project is supervised by the humanities division of the Library. In charge is Bernard Kreissman, assistant director for the humanities division.

Kreissman said Monday that Room 306 is primarily, though not exclusively, for music students' use. He stated that he hopes in the near future to expand its use to other departments. For instance, the English Department would be aided by the room's acquisition of recorded plays.

"This is not a recreational listening room at the present time," said Kreissman. "We feel that the Music Room at the Student Union is adequate for that purpose. Future plans in this area are indefinite."

The phonograph is operated with head sets. Thus a student will be able to obtain the listening benefit for his assignments without disturbing others in the library. More phonographs will be purchased if there is a demand for them.

Students wishing to take advantage of Room 306 can check out head sets at the Reserve Desk in the south end of the Education Reading Room.
