Increasing Business Opportunities For College Grads Noted By Dean

By BARBARA SHARPE
Staff Writer

There is more of a demand for well-trained college graduates in business and industry today than the University is able to supply. This statement was made by Dean J. P. Colbert, dean of student affairs and chairman of the Board of Occupational Placement. The function of this board is to place graduating seniors in outstanding jobs throughout the country. As Dean Colbert said, "Our Philosophy, like that of many other colleges and universities, is that in higher education, we must not only discharge the duties and obligations to the students until they get a degree, but also must help them make the transition from the University to employment."

He observed that the demand is so great today because there are fewer young people available to fill the jobs. Abundance of employment opportunities is expected to continue until 1960.

Although the functions of the Board of Occupational Placement are highly important, most students are unaware of this service the prospect of getting a job is near at hand. Actually, this board performs an extensive service to University students. Board members include representatives from the various colleges on the campus. They handle relations with firms who desire to send personnel managers or other members of their company to the University to interview seniors. The work of the Occupational Placement Board begins when a company representative writes for an appointment to come to the campus. These visits may start as early as Oct. 14. The dates of the representatives' visits are kept on a calendar in Dean Colbert's office. The fact that two such appointments are usually scheduled five days a week from October until June is indicative of the size of this program. Some companies who want graduates in only one field contact that particular college directly. However, the majority interview students of different colleges and these interviews are handled by the Board. Last year 165 organizations were granted interviews by the Board. Dean Colbert estimated that altogether over 200 companies sent representatives to the campus last year. Organizations that participate in the program include the General Electric Corporation, Bell Telephone Co., R.C.A., United States Steel, Chrysler Corporation, Colgate-Palm Olive Co., Sunbeam Appliance Co., Quaker Oats Co., and Eastman Kodak Co. Allis-Chalmers, John Deere Co., Proctor and Gamble, the Westinghouse Corporation and the Maytag Co. also send representatives. After an appointment is made for the company official to come to the campus, board members post notices on campus bulletin prior to the visit. If a student boards approximately two weeks is interested in the organization, he is able to go to 209 Administration Hall to look through a brochure published by that company. These brochures explain the benefits, salaries and opportunities for advancement in addition to listing the jobs available. Many brochures contain descriptions of the cities in which company plants are located. The organizations are anxious that prospective employees become well-acquainted with the company and its advantages. Dean Colbert observed that students often ask if high grades mean anything in occupational placement. "The answer is yes," he said. But he pointed out that personnel managers do not hire for scholarship alone; they want someone who will be an asset to their company. "They do, however, ask for a student's average. Most company representatives are most interested in a student who has done well in college. They believe that if a student is interested in his career, he will deny himself a few good times in order to achieve good grades. This type of person will be an asset to any organization. Provisions For Women "It is not difficult to place women in important jobs today," said

Dean Colbert. He added that many large companies make special provisions for women employees. Companies such as Braniff and United Air Lines send representatives to the campus to interview women students for positions as hostesses. He observed that in some occupations, "it is still difficult for women to advance at the same rate as men," but added that this is not true in all instances. He stressed the fact that it is possible to place students in all types of occupations, but said that the greatest demand today is for graduates in the fields of engineering, chemistry, physics, mathematics, business administration and geology.

Custodians To Acquire Dog For Blind Veteran

By CONNIE HURST
Staff Writer
Wanted: the assistance of the University students in gathering a bushel of red strips gained from packages of all brands of cigarettes. This red strip fund has been instigated on the campus by the Union custodians in an effort to acquire a seeing eye dog for a disabled veteran at the Omaha Veteran's Hospital. The partially blind veteran who was injured in the Korean War has been hospitalized in Omaha for the past two years. His injury was inflicted while a member of the parachute infantry in the 82nd Airborne Division. Interest in the veteran was gained through a union employee, who was the platoon sergeant of the 82nd Airborn Division. For the past month the ex-sergeant and two other members of the division have been collecting the red strips. Up to date the custodians and friends of the disabled veteran have gathered eight pounds of the valuable strips, but approximately seven additional pounds are needed to fill the bushel basket. The required 15 pounds will be sent to the leading tobacco manufacturer who will exchange the strips for the seeing eye dog. Money for a harness and other equipment for the dog has already been collected through the members of the 82nd Division. Students interested in contributing to the fund may deposit their red strips in the container placed in circulation boxes at the Union.
