Teachers 'Unaware' Of Placement Plan

By ROGER WAIT

"Apparently we have people here in the Summer Session who are unaware of the Teacher Placement Division or who do not care to use its services.

That declaration was made by Division Co-ordinator Wesley Meierhenry in a Summer Nebraskan interview Monday. There is a current "shortage of qualified teachers," he added.

Meierhenry urged Teachers College students who have not yet registered with the Division to do se immediately. He said that the only requirements for registration are 15 credit hours on record and recommendations of three faculty members from any college in the University.

Between eight and ten school superintendents a day come in to get teachers, he said, with between 25 and 30 openings a day.

This service includes solicitation ol teaching vacancies from all over the nation, its territories and some foreign countries. An up-to-date set of credentials is maintained for each registrant, which Meierhenry said, which provides "personal data, educational background comments" from administrators.

Meierhenry listed several reasons for the current teacher shortage. Low salaries, living conditions in smaller towns, the "lack of good brary. induction procedures which de not make teachers feel at ratings of faculty members and home" and competition from industry were cited.

Regents Assist In Double Play

The Board of Regents may have raised the tuition fee at their Monday meeting, but they also gave recognition to young love and saved a coed $10 she might have had to pay as an absentee fee for missing summer commencement.

Martha Sorenson, Arts and Science senior, confused the dates of her coming wedding and commencement exercises and, finding them to be the same, chose to travel to the altar instead of the graduation platform.

The Regents, however, were understanding and waived the customary absentee fee and sent along their best wishes to the young bride.

In February 1954, a four-year investigation proposal was submitted to the non-profit Carnegie Corporation of New York City. Called "The Nebraska Community Education Study," it was proposed in a letter that "the study would be concerned with the general probliving standards and values in community settings.'

Subsequently the corporation approved a two-year program and granted $90,000 to carry out the LePell's paintings and drawings are abstract. The themes seem to be an expression of an inner compulsion of LePell's to set forth his feelings in artistic mediums. Almost all of them employ somber colors woven in such a way as to convey an impression of mystical concern with modern life's problems.

LePell's favorite painting in the show is "Norfolk Air," although he would not give a specific reason for his personal preference. He said that his inspiration comes from progress. "Painting a painting becomes visually exciting in itself."

In LePell's opinion, Thomas Sheffield, assistant professor of art who specializes in ceramics, is the
