Asian Problems

WORLD DISCUSSION SCHEDULED TODAY

The topic for the second "World Trouble Spot Forum" scheduled today will be "Asia."

The discussion will be held at 2 p.m. in Love Library Auditorium. The area and its background, problems and future will be discussed by three members of the University faculty from the departments of economics, political science and geography. The program is an outgrowth of 13 radio programs which were previously produced by the University.

Members of the panel are Colbert Held, assistant professor of geography; Carl Schneider, associate professor of political science, and Wallace Peterson, assistant professor of economics. Jack McBride, assistant television director, is in charge of the series.

McBride said that since there were only two times set aside for the forums, the topics, of necessity, are quite broad in their scope.

The panel members will each discuss the phase of the problem with which they are familiar.

The topic of the first "World Trouble Spot Forum" was "Europe."

Personality: Baron

'World Seems Better'; Teacher Role Threefold

By ROGER WAIT

Editor's note: This is one of the last articles in The Summer Nebraskan's "personality" series.

Although "I don't claim to be an expert" on current Russian foreign policy, a visiting professor in history said in a Summer Nebraskan interview Wednesday, "I'm very happy that things seem to be looking better and more favorable for bringing about a degree of harmony" between Communism and Democracy.

Dr. Samuel Baron, who specializes in Russian history, said that the current Russian situation is "in many ways similar to" the Soviet situation in 1921-1923. A recently concluded world war, "a great degree of disorganization and popular unrest in various parts of the world" were cited by the Russian specialist as similarities.

Baron, who will replace Dr. A.T. Anderson for one year while the latter is in Turkey, continued: "Now a considerable degree of stability is at hand." "We may now be entering a time of a policy of live and let live," he added.

This policy, Dr. Baron said, may be "to the advantage of the West." He said it would give the West "time to set in order those problems which provide the soil in which Communism seems to flourish."

Baron listed two major problems: the "liquidation of colonialism and the unsatisfactory social and economic conditions in such countries as France and Italy."

Dr. Baron studied at the Russian Institute at Columbia University for two years, receiving his M.A. degree from that institution in 1948. He took his Ph. D. degree in 1952 at Columbia.

A 1942 graduate of Cornell University where he majored in botany, Baron served in the Army in World War II, rising to the rank of captain. He has taught at the University of Missouri, Northwestern University and the University of Tennessee, where he met his wife. She was an associate professor of home economics there. They have two daughters.

Born and raised in New York, Baron referred to himself as a "converted country boy."

The first function or role of a teacher is to convey to students something about their cultural heritage," he said. The second one, Baron went on, is "to give them a background to enable them to understand better the world in which they live." The third function of a teacher of history, Baron said, is to develop in students the "critical facilities necessary for a citizen of a democracy."

A university teacher, he continued, may also help to "push back the frontiers of knowledge through original research." His teaching may be "enriched and improved if he is engaged in original research."

The teacher of history in secondary schools, he said, need not do as much research as a university history professor. But, he asserted, high school teachers can, "by doing reading in their subjects, enrich their own knowledge and understanding to be better teachers."

In order to be a good teacher, Baron said, one must have thorough knowledge of "subject matter, great interest and enthusiasm for it, and desire to convey it."
