The Outside World: Arms Delivered

By WALT SWITZER Staff Writer

West Germany received her first shipment of gift arms from the U.S. Tuesday. One billion dollars worth of arms and equipment were presented to West German officials in a dock-side ceremony at Bremerhaven. Both U.S. Embassy officials and German government representatives were present.

The equipment will go to the new 12 division, 50,000 man army that Germany is raising. Present strength of the army is 10,000 but the arms will be delivered to the army as it grows.

Reds Reduce Troops

Following the Russian announcement of a reduction in her number of troops top military authorities were speculating that the Soviet would put main emphasis on mobility and increased firepower. Army sources said that Russia has already completed the re-equipping of its forces.

The new weapons which are part of a family of deadly new atomic age pieces have been taken from the drawing board stage and are now being produced. Two of the weapons, atomic artillery pieces are capable of firing more than 16 miles. The new 240 heavy mortar is the largest caliber weapon of its type in the world.

Soil Bank Lacks Support

President Eisenhower's new farm bill which calls for a $1,200,000,000 soil bank is expected to find little support from mid-west farmers. Most farmers fail to understand the soil bank plan and think of it as a political football.

In a recent Gallup poll only 31 per cent of the mid-west farmers said that they would join the plan and 42 per cent are against the plan and 27 per cent hadn't decided.

Atomic Fallout Possible

Commissioner W. F. Libby, testifying before the Atomic Energy Commission said that the government should provide insurance against the mathematical possibility that a nuclear power plant might run wild.

Libby testified that a bad reactor accident might cost millions of dollars of damage to property and could cause exposure to possibly 500 persons.

While the chance of such an accident is only remotely possible Rogers McCullough, chairman of AEC's Committee on Reactor Safeguards said, "Once a nuclear runaway is started no human can act rapidly enough to stop it."

Students, Faculty: Five Nominations Submitted For Outstanding Nebraskan

The names five more nominees for Outstanding Nebraskan have been submitted to the Nebraska office.

This award is offered each year to a member of the student body Miss Unterseher and of the faculty who has given outstanding service to the University.

Any senior student and any member of the faculty who have been at the University for one year is eligible.

Students nominated are Carole Unterseher and Dick Fellman.

Candidates from the faculty are Ray Morgan, C. Bertrand Schultz and Edgar Johnson.

Carole Unterseher, senior in Teachers College, has been nominated. The reason given for the nomination was her "quiet but definite service to the University and to others."

"Spectacular service and glowing campaigns are fine," said the source of the nomination, "but it is time that people like Carole, who quietly and without seeking honor and glory serve the school, also receive recognition."

"Miss Unterseher," according to the source of the nomination, "has quietly and without domination left her mark on the people around her." She has, it continued, never tried to achieve recognition for her deeds and yet she has done much for her school, her friends, and her sorority.

Another student nominated for this honor is Dick Fellman, senior in Arts and Sciences. Fellman's record as first semester editor of The Nebraskan is the basis for his nomination, the letter said.

His courage as editor was demonstrated in the All American rator in his newspaper receive, the letter stated.

"Fellman's foresight, keen perception of campus issues and understanding of major campus problems made The Nebraskan a paper of campus thought, rather than merely a sheet of campus news," the letter of nomination said.

A member of the faculty nominated is Ray Morgan, assistant professor of journalism.

"Professor Morgan has made many and valuable contributions to the University," the letter of nomination said. "He has won innumerable national and international awards in photography."

Johnson

The letter called Morgan "a constant source of inspiration to his students a man who plays a dual role: that of patient teacher and friend."

Another faculty nominee is C. Bertrand Schultz, professor of geology and Director of the State Museum.

Professor Schultz has written innumerable articles and books in his field and is a nationally recognized authority, according to his source of nomination. "His very presence here at the University lends prestige to the department."

Schultz is an active member of countless associations and organizations in the field of paleontology and geology. He is active in community affairs and is respected and well known in Lincoln circles, the letter said.

Another faculty member nominated for the honor is Edgar Johnson, professor of history.

"Professor Johnson is an historian of international reputation, a great scholar and an inspiring teacher," the letter stated. It continued, "His impressive knowledge and humane approach have made his classes high points at the University of Nebraska."

Dr. Johnson was one of the first and strongest defenders of Professor E. N. Anderson in his fight with the American Legion, and he gave more than polite lip service to principles academic freedom with his vigorous attack, the letter said.
