The Political Spotlight

State Political Bigwigs Slate Talks In Lincoln

By JACK POLLOCK

Eds. Note: The Political Spotlight, written by Jack Pollock, copy editor, will appear regularly on The Nebraskan's news pages. This column will consist mainly of short news items and comments on the national and local political scene.

The political spotlight in Nebraska shifts to Lincolnland this evening at the Chamber of Commerce building, where the state's three gubernatorial candidates will address the public at a Get-Out-the-Vote dinner.

Price for both Democrats and Republicans will be $1.50. The meeting, open to the public, begins at 6:30 p.m. although those who do not wish to come for the dinner may come for the oratory, slated to begin at 7:30 p.m.

The three featured speakers are Gov. Victor Anderson in the GOP corner; Democratic candidate Frank Sorrell, Syracuse and George Morris Omaha, Independent. Also on the Cornhusker political scene, it was announced last weekend that both vice-presidential candidates will compete—politically speaking—at the National Mechanical Cornpicking Contest at Columbus next weekend. Exact time and dates have not been announced but they are not expected to coincide.

The GOP has announced plans for another round of activities by President Eisenhower, a previously unscheduled 5500 mile 48-hour jaunt in mid-October to Minnesota, Washington and Oregon.

Elsewhere on the GOP political chart, the Republican "truth squad" trailing Adlai Stevenson and Sen. Estes Kefauver through 13 states, Sunday claimed it had found 20 misstatements of fact in the speeches of the two Democratic candidates.

On the Democratic ledger, Adlai Stevenson's reported "eyeopener" is expected to be his program for a "New America" to be released this week. And finally, Democratic elder statesman Harry S. Truman plans a series of speeches on the east coast "to help the Democratic victory cause."
