Elections: Candidates Address JC Dinner

All three gubernatorial candidates addressed the Junior Chamber of Commerce "Get Out The Vote" dinner Tuesday which was held in the Chamber of Commerce building.

Republican candidate, Gov. Victor Anderson, Democratic candidate, Frank Sorrell, and Independent candidate, George Morris expressed their respective views on Nebraska's current governmental situation.

Anderson, who was first on the agenda, stated that the accomplishments of his administration to the some 120 people in attendance.

One of the points in the Governor's address was a clarification of a 27 million dollar increase in the State budget. Anderson went on to cite the various ways this increase was being utilized.

Sorrell, the Democratic aspirant for governor, accused the Nebraska Republican Administration of cutting educational expenditures.

In his speech, Sorrell also stated that the University is "training scientists for other states."

Candidate Morris declared that the problem of sufficient teachers in education today is very pressing.

He went on to say that the salaries teachers are receiving in the state today are "too low" and that consequently "we are losing good teachers to other states."

—The Political Spotlight— Campaign Candidates Level Verbal Bludgeons

By JACK POLLOCK Copy Editor

Verbal bludgeons—reminiscent of the political good old days—rolled freely from the lips of our nation's presidential and vice-presidential nominees this week, beginning a new era in 1956 campaign speechmaking.

Though not as savage as some four letter words in bitter blasts of previous presidential campaigns, nevertheless it heralded the fact that neither party plans to hold back their "windup words" until the campaign finish line.

President Dwight Eisenhower deviated from his usual staid pattern to blast the Democrats for having tolerated the "thievery of inflation" in the former administration and of talking "wicked nonsense" and "political bunk" in the current campaign.

Although not naming Stevenson as the opponent of his party, Monday night at Lexington, Ky., Eisenhower said he was facing an "apparently confused candidate" who wants to return to the "zigzag" directionless road of "trial and error government."

At Milwaukee the previous evening he sailed into the Democrats and his opponent for "their intent to revert to the unsound, inflation-heavy spending, government interference, centralized control policies of the former administration."

Adlai Stevenson struck back at what he termed President Eisenhower's adoption of Vice President Nixon's "pattern of political looseness."

Expressing resentment over Eisenhower's reference to Stevenson's statements on education as "wicked nonsense" Adlai added it was significant when the Republicans consider all form of criticism "evil inspired."

who last week charged former President Harry Truman as a traitor to the principles of the Democratic party, this week included Stevenson also as a "deserter of the Democratic party" by following new rather than the traditional principles of the Democratic party.

In contrast was a televised program in Milwaukee Monday evening, at which Nixon stated he thought Stevenson was a man of "character and integrity." Replying to a question which brought up the fact that Stevenson is a divorced man, Nixon called this "out of bounds" in a political campaign. He said a candidate's "personal life" should not become a political issue.

Democratic vice-presidential nominee Estes Kefauver's latest barb was that the GOP should abandon the elephant, which is supposed to have a memory, as its symbol and adopt the ostrich, instead "for being so forgetful of farmers' needs."

Elder Democratic statesman Harry Truman, who says he's always ready to help elect Democrats anywhere, anytime, uttered charges of "garbled and bungled" policies in the Eisenhower administration.

Truman tagged Richard Nixon as one of the best men helping the Democrats to return to power. "The Democrats welcome him with open arms. Mr. Nixon does not have the confidence of the people of the U.S."

Kinsman Says Respected Radiation Fairly Safe

With proper "respect" radiation is no more hazardous to work with than dynamite or electricity, a radiological health authority said Tuesday at the university.

Speaking at a two-day institute for University personnel using ionizing radiation, Simon Kinsman, chief of the radiological health training of the Robert A. Taft Sanitary Engineering Center at Cincinnati, said:

"The industrial safety record for people handling radiation is far better than the accident record for any other factor. If precautions are taken, there is no reason for the worker to fear radiation."

He listed three primary precautionary factors: time—working with radiation a short period of time; distance—use of remote control handling devices, and shielding—use of barriers between the working and the radiation.

Other participants of the Institute are Donald A. Fecso, sanitary engineer of the Robert A. Taft Sanitary Engineering Center,
