Possible Tribunal Discussed

The committee on Student Activities of the Student Council held an open meeting Thursday to discuss the possibility of Student Tribunal at the University. Four of the members include (left to right) Helen Gourlay, Norma Wolf, Sue Henkle, Marvin Breslow and Bev Deepe. The Tribunal is still in the planning stage and few of the details have been worked out. The open meeting was intended to sound out student opinion on the possibility of such an organization.

Only seven students attended. If set up, the Tribunal would handle disciplinary cases now handled by the Committee on Student Affairs, with certain exceptions. The relationship of the Tribunal to existing disciplinary organizations is not yet clear.

Student Council:

Few Students Attend Meeting On NU Tribunal Possibility

Seven students turned out for a Student Council open meeting Thursday to discuss the possibility of a Student Tribunal at the University.

The meeting was conducted by the Students Activities Committee which has been investigating the possibility of such an organization to replace or supplement the present Committee on Student Affairs in regard to disciplinary action.

Marvin Breslow, chairman, explained that the idea of the tribunal was based on the principle that "students should have an interest in anything in the University which affects their education." He explained that the tribunal probably would not handle cases of discipline any better than the faculty now does and that the students are not necessarily dissatisfied with the way the faculty now handles them. The goal of the tribunal is merely to allow the students to handle their own discipline in accordance with the above principle, he stated.

Sue Henkle explained the possible areas over which the tribunal might have jurisdiction.

She stated that there were two divisions of student offenses, academic and non-academic. In the first category fall such cases as class attendance, cheating and curriculum fulfillments. Under non-academic cases come such things as offenses against property, persons and peace. She stressed that it would not have authority over cases involving morals.

Connie Hurst explained that the tribunal could be responsible to any one of five groups in the University: the Board of Regents, the Chancellor, the Committee on Student Affairs, the Dean of Student Affairs or the Deans associates. Helen Gourlay explained the possibilities of membership. Probably the tribunal would be rather small, she said. Suggested membership was four students and one faculty member with vote or five students and one non-voting faculty member.

The meeting was then thrown open to discussion. The audience pointed out such disadvantages of the system as the difficulty in selecting qualified members and the duplication of a faculty committee.

Jim Pike, sophomore in Arts and Sciences who had attended a military school using such a tribunal, stated that he thought the University needed such an institution. He said the organization had worked "successfully" at his school.

Major points of disagreement were over the position of the tribunal in relation to the existing disciplinary organizations on campus and the method of selecting its members.

Breslow closed the meeting by stating that the committee would continue to work on the proposal in hopes of coming up with a workable plan to present to the students.

Hungarians:

Campus Groups Donate 'Student Project' Funds

Kappa Delta Sorority reported to the Hungarian Student Project Committee that it will contribute $80 to the project, according to Bev Ellis, committee member.

Alpha Xi Delta pledges have also said that they will contribute $23.75 to the project, Miss Ellis said.

She added that several campus societies are considering donating to the cause.

The Presbyterian-Congregational student house has pledged $30 per month for one year toward the maintenance fund for refugees. Contributing $40 to the fund was the Student Fellowship of the Baptists and Disciples of Christ on campus, said Mary Bradley, committee member.

"The project seems to be catching fire throughout the state," Phyl Bonner, publicity chairman, stated. The Imperial assembly of the order of the rainbow for girls has donated ten dollars, she said. The committee is hoping for more such out-state support, she added.

The Student Council, in a meeting Wednesday, unanimously passed a resolution supporting the project.

The central committee of the University-sanctioned project, is being expanded to include representatives of interested organizations, according to Barb Sharp, committee chairman.

Any organization wishing representation on the committee should contact Miss Sharp.

Miss Sharp said that the response to the project is good, but that it is necessary that the committee be able to guarantee clothing, board and room, maintenance funds and transportation by Christmas vacation. She added that anyone wishing to help with the project should send their contributions to the University of Nebraska Foundation, Room 106 Love Library, and that the checks should be marked "Hungarian Student Project."

No specific information in regard to the names of the refugees that will be coming to NU has been received as yet, according to Margo Hornady, committee secretary. She added that this information is expected from World University Service within the week.

Contacting of many Lincoln Lincoln stores and civic organizations is expected to get under way Friday, Terry Mitchell, committee member, said.

The problem of board and room is still under consideration by Inter-Fraternity Council, according to Bob Schuyler, IFC representative on the committee. Panhellenic is also discussing the project, Sally Flannagan, committee member, said.

Looker Named To Head Chem Organization

J. H. Looker, associate professor of chemistry at the University, has been elected chairman of the Nebraska Section of the American Chemical Society.

James Brinn of Northwestern Metal Company is the new vice chairman. R. B. Johnston of the University, and Robert Glazier of the Nebraska Wesleyan University department of chemistry are the new secretary and treasurer, respectively.

Elected to the executive committee are: H. E. Baumgarten, associate professor of chemistry at the University; R. E. Feeney, chairman of the University department of biochemistry and nutrition; and L. E. Harris of Harris Laboratories.

Meet Postponed

Due to blizzards and conflicting exams, the Midwest Collegiate Editors Conference, scheduled for Saturday in the Union, has been called off, according to Sam Jensen, chairman of the Conference.

Harrison:

GOP Claims Drouth Hurt In Elections

Declining livestock prices and the extreme drouth—coupled with an overly optimistic GOP attitude—were the primary reasons for the close Congressional election in November, Congressman Robert Harrison told University Republicans Thursday.

The Congressman from Norfolk, who trailed his Democratic opponent Lawrence Brock by 1129 votes on election night, passed Brock by a slim margin following the mail vote returns. Brock may yet contest the election on the basis of election irregularities in some counties.

"Too many Republicans took Bob Harrison for granted," Harrison stated, "but had there been a good crop this year the victory margin would have been much greater."

He said too many people thought they could "get back in the drivers seat" with a change in congressmen.

Although only 36 percent of the people in Nebraska are Democrats, Harrison said many people—depressed by drouth and livestock conditions—switched their vote this year.

In his previous campaigns Harrison won by margins of 65, 66 and 68 percent of the votes cast.

Other factors contributing to a close election, Harrison said, were "an effective campaign by Democratic committeemen" and what he termed a "two-edged harpoon on the part of some of the opposition."

Harrison said he campaigned primarily on his record and not on criticism leveled by his opposition.

He admitted the Democrats put up the "strongest opponent they could" but said he met a larger percentage of the people through mass meetings and personal contacts.

The absentee votes which gave him his margin was the largest percentage of mail votes he had received in his four elections. He added, "It's a hard way to win." "Next time," he said, "to keep the GOP in power we're going to have to work for it." However he said he didn't think any greater campaign "concentration" would be given the mail vote next time than was given for the Nov. 1956 election.

Harrison urged the NU Republicans, "if you don't like the Republican party, don't quit it—improve it."

Mitchell Unlikely To Return To NU

Decision Not Yet Received By Committee

Dr. C. Clyde Mitchell, former chairman of the University's department of agricultural economics, will probably not return to Lincoln to appear before the Senate Committee on Academic Tenure and Privilege.

Dr. Mitchell is presently in Mexico City working with the United Nations Food and Agricultural Organization.

The report that at present Dr. Mitchell was not planning to return to the campus was unconfirmed Friday, but it was revealed that when Dr. Mitchell had made his final decision he would inform David Dow, chairman of the faculty committee and professor of law.

Mitchell will send material to the committee which will present his case in which he makes six accusations against University administrators.

The unconfirmed report said that Mitchell might possibly be able to get leave from his present job in February. Mitchell resigned from the University in September. Dow said Thursday that he had not yet been informed of any decision by Mitchell to return or not to return. Dow has stated that dates for the hearings would be set as soon as all of the people involved could be advised of the committee's determination and convenient times agreed upon.

Dow said in October that he doubted whether Mitchell would return for the opening of the hearings.

Mitchell called for an investigation into the specific causes of his removal from the chairmanship of the agricultural economics department.

The first hint of the possible demotion of Dr. C. Clyde Mitchell from his position as chairman of the department of agricultural economics came on April 12, 1956. Rumors reached the Nebraskan

The reason given by Lambert was "to strengthen beyond present levels the research and extension programs in agricultural economics". The Dean denied that his decision involved Dr. Mitchell's tenure.

The Nebraskan wrote to many outside sources concerning the issue. Returns indicated a high degree of confidence in Mitchell's ability. Certain professors previously connected with the University indicated that the stand of the Nebraskan that the removal was a moral violation of academic freedom was in part true and that similar situations existed in other colleges of the University.

On May 15, the Chancellor issued a statement in which he denied that the University had in any case violated the spirit or the principles of academic freedom.

On May 23, Mitchell issued a special statement to the Nebraskan saying his academic freedom had been violated. In six points, he claimed that repeated attempts had been made to "tone down, modify and even to censor my publications." He said he was advised "to resign my position and move elsewhere, assured that I would never get a salary increase, and that I was on the Regents blacklist." He maintained that "In Feb. 1955, because of continued controversy over my views, I was told that I was going to be relieved of my chairmanship."
