Theta Sig: Journalist Scholarship Announced

Theta Sigma Phi, national professional fraternity for women in journalism, announced its annual scholarship-research award for student and alumnae members. Deadline for applications is Friday.

In addition, alumnae with three or more years of professional experience, are being given the opportunity for the first time to apply for an assistantship in graduate study at the College of Communication Arts, Michigan State University. Announced last June at the fraternity's national convention in Madison, Wis., by Dr. Gordon A. Savine, dean, it offers the candidate study for a master's degree while assisting journalism faculty members in research activities. The financial grant is from $800 to $1600; the application deadline, Friday.

The $500 scholarship-research award is available either to a student or alumna seeking assistance in attaining wider professional preparation through graduate study in an accredited school of his choice or in undertaking a research project in some specified field of journalism which will be of general use to members of the fraternity or the profession. The current winner is Anne Durrum Robinson of Austin, Tex., who is surveying and evaluating adult educational television programs across the country. Her work has been accepted as a master's thesis by The University of Texas, and has won acclaim by the television industry.

Applications for both awards can be obtained from the national scholarship chairman, Mrs. Alfred N. Smith, 10311 Pineview Ct., Overland 14, Mo. Entrants will be graded according to a specific rating system by a committee composed of St. Louis Alumnae chapter members who are active in the field of education. The final selection will be made by the fraternity's national council and the winner announced at the June convention in Chicago.

Sick Students Categorized By Week Days

Collegiate illness can be categorized according to the day of the week, according to a nurse at Clarke College, Dubuque, Ia.

"First," said the college nurse, "comes Monday Morning misery. A sign of the onslaught of this disease is the sight of a collegian, suitcase in hand, waiting for a taxi on Friday afternoon. First real symptoms are visible Sunday evening when the student feebly signs in."

"The cure? A complete day of rest."

Freshman and sophomores get "I-ache-all-over-itis" on Tuesdays and Thursdays. Symptoms: sore throats, stiff backs, weak knees, unprepared assignments. Cure, exemptions from physical education class.

Friday, Saturdays and Sunday are the healthiest days of the week and students who are sick all week always recover on Thursdays, this nurse remarks.

Musk Ox: Rare Skull Proves Freezing Climate

Additional evidence that extreme cold temperatures covered Nebraska some 10,000 to 25,000 years ago has been uncovered in Franklin county.

The evidence is a partial skull of a musk-ox unearthed by Max Barker of Republican City, a dirt excavator, while reactivating a spring on the Albert Bauerle farm three miles north of Naponee.

Barker brought the fossil to the University State Museum in Morrill Hall, where Director Bertrand Schultz identified the musk-ox.

Dr. Schultz said that musk-ox fossils have been found in various parts of Nebraska, but this the first such evidence reported in Franklin county.

A museum party, led by Lloyd Tanner, associate curator of vertebrate paleontology, plan to investigate further the site of the find.

Capable of living in 70 degree below zero weather, musk-oxen, Dr. Schultz explained, are found at the edges of glaciers, or tundra regions. Today, he said, there are herds in Greenland and the northern parts of Canada.

He said the find will aid studies now being conducted to determine the past climatic conditions of Nebraska. It is hoped that the research can be used as a guide in predicting future climatic conditions.
