

Daily Nebraskan Editorials:

Second Budget Try

Tuesday we reported that 3,348 of the 4,286 men and women students who replied to the Student Council survey were against an increase in University tuition.

Thursday, Chancellor Hardin appeared for the second time before the Legislature's budget committee and stated that first claims for funds from any tuition hikes at the University should go for hiring additional teachers. But he said that the Board of Regents has not yet made a decision on the problem of increased tuition.

The Chancellor told the budget committee that the budget recommended by Governor Anderson will cover salary increases on a merit basis for staff members; take care of fixed costs such as increased social security contributions, increased retirement stipends, increased utilities for new buildings and additional work at the Alliance and Northeast Nebraska Experiment Stations.

Hardin added that the recommended budget would leave only $200,000 for all other additional needs of the University including the critical situation at University Hospital and the hiring of new staff members to take care of the increased student enrollment.

The budget committee had directed the University Administration to re-examine the budget and make cuts wherever possible.

From the reluctance of the student body to accept the idea of a tuition hike and the reluctance of the Legislature to give the University a healthy sum of money it looks as present as if the University would be in a stalemate.

The Chancellor told the budget committee that the maximum amount tuition could be raised without affecting enrollment was $30. He said that the Regents had been discussing the problem but had come to no conclusion at the present time.

Budget committee members inferred that if the Regents didn't raise the tuition, the Legislature would have to take the job into its own hands. That doesn't leave much of a leeway for the student body to have their voice in the matters. And it doesn't leave much of a leeway for the recognized task of the Regents; that of regulating tuition. The Chancellor said that he felt the Legislature could make the tuition increase even though this has heretofore been an administrative function.

In other words where the Legislators fear the power of the voter and will not give the boost in the budget, the students will be stuck with the load—despite the fact that this is a public institution.

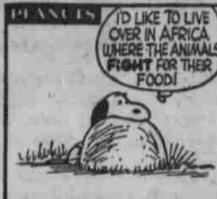

We object to the action of the budget committee in denying a full budget and replacing the burden of a state university on those who immediately benefit from it for three very basic reasons.

1) It has always been the function of the Board of Regents to regulate the tuition at the University. The Legislature, while not overstepping its legal bounds in stating that they will act where the Regents fail to, fails to recognize the power of delegated authority as established by the Constitution of our state.

2) The Student Body of the University has stated that it does not want (and in many cases cannot afford) a tuition increase at the present time.

3) It has always been the function of the state to support public institutions to the limit of its ability. When the needs of the government grow, the burden placed on each and every citizen should grow apportionately. The students at the University alone do not profit from their education. The people of the state—children in the schools, farmers, sportsmen, business men—benefit greatly and continually from the graduates and the research of the University. They should be made to share the loads of the school and give to the public school the support it deserves without plastering a small segment of the citizenry—and a largely unrepresented portion, at that—with an unfair share of the burden.

The Daily Nebraskan hopes that the Unicameral will re-examine the case for the University as presented by Chancellor Hardin. It is our sincere desire of the University to grow but not at the expense of a small minority of citizens in this state.

Nebraskan Letterips

To the Editor:

The Daily Nebraskan reports that the Chancellor has finally appointed a parking committee to look into this crisis on the campus. Those of us who made it over to the State of the University convocation early in the year remember well Dr. Hardin's words that the parking problem was one of great concern to him.

Now we're glad to see that some action is finally being taken. Whether the board will decide anything or make any concrete recommendations is not for us to know so soon. But we would like to be reassured that the student will have a voice in the matters discussed. Your editorial suggests that students be heard at open sessions. That's a good idea, but the chances are we won't be given an opportunity to have open hearings.

For open hearings mean some real action is being taken and I speculate that the problem is too big a one for the board to handle.

Keene, the council's representative on the group has said that parking isn't the responsibility of the University. Hardin said that he has a deep concern for the problem. The members of the committee will have to agree before they can go and work efficiently to improve situations.

Maybe if enough of us get behind the council and let them know that we're concerned with the situation, there will be a change in the attitude of our council rep. After all, I've always thought it is the function of the student governing body to reflect the views of the majority of the students; I may be wrong.

Ode To An Exhibit In The Museum Of Modern Art

There it stood as bold as brass, Except it wasn't brass but glass, Standing on a polished log In the intellectual fog Of a room in New York City, In far off New York—what a pity The glass is thick and shattered twice With star-shaped cracks, like fractured ice, And highly colored daubs of paint Are splashed all over, without the faintest sign of symmetry or line. A neatly lettered sign is posted Beneath this work of genius and power, "To be looked at with one eye closed For almost half an hour." People sniggered and with soft, art-gallery tread Passed on, while I, standing yogi-like upon my head Discovered—oh, dear people, what you miss, This work of art resembles three anemic jellyfish Dangling their chilblained toes in the soothing China Sea, As painted by a small mortician from the state of Tennessee; For surely it's well known in circles arty That after each interment party, Midget morticians—and especially those from Tennessee, you know, Relax by painting jellyfish with their left big toe, While standing on their head inside the frigidaire, (Must get kinda cold in there!) Surely in this enlightened age, everybody knows, That Chinese jellyfish just don't have toes!

A word or two before you go...

A preview of the 1957 University of Nebraska football fortunes will be held April 6 at the annual Varsity-Aumni football game.

This game will be the climax of All-Sports Day, a day set aside in the spring for this traditional pigskin fray, and embellished with games and exhibitions by other varsity athletic teams.

The game this spring shows unusual interest. It marks the debut of a new coach and, a new team. It will also bring in alumni that have graced Memorial Stadium in years past, bringing with them all-conference and even All-American laurels.

The one strange thing about All-Sports Day is the lack of student interest. High school coaches all across the state bring their young charges in, alums have been writing for tickets and Lincoln's football fans show up in representative numbers.

But for one reason or another, University students don't seem to know what is going on.

For one buck there isn't a better deal in town.

The new Interfraternity Council officers have been elected.

Good luck, gentlemen. Remember, your greatest responsibilities lie in protecting the ultimate interests of the University and the fraternity system, even if actions to carry out these responsibilities do not meet with immediate and clamoring approval.

No word has been heard lately on the Student Council resolution that students members on Faculty Senate subcommittees be allowed to vote. The Senate Committee on Committees asked the Council to formulate a plan whereby these student committee members would be selected to be "more representative" of the student body.

The Council doesn't feel it can do this.

Meanwhile, the snows come and go and no one seems to know exactly what to do, except wait.

And in waiting, let us not forget the issue entirely. Out of sight, out of mind, as they say.

Oh yes—Happy Spring, wherever it is.

"What's it like to be in BUSINESS ADMINISTRATION AT IBM?"

Two years ago, Robert Everett asked himself this question. Today, as Administrative Assistant to the Divisional Controller, Bob reviews his experience at IBM and gives some pointers that may be helpful to you in taking the first, most important step in your business career.

"What's it like to work for a big, expanding company like IBM? What would I be asked to do? Would I get ahead fast?" These were some of the questions that filled Bob Everett's mind as he faced up to the big problem, "How can I put my M.B.A. training to the best possible use?"

Bob came directly to IBM from Cornell in July, 1955, with an M.B.A. in finance. He was immediately assigned, with twenty-nine other M.B.A.'s, to a Business Administration training program. This six months' program comprised general orientation in the entire IBM organization, a six weeks' field trip to the

Developing a new system

Syracuse branch office and several months at the Poughkeepsie manufacturing facilities. There he gained a functional knowledge of IBM machines, particularly the 700 series of giant electronic computers.

His training completed by January, 1956, Bob was assigned to the Methods Department as a Methods Analyst at IBM World Headquarters in New York City. Here, with the cooperation of operating department personnel, he worked on the development of systems and procedures for the various Division areas. In addition to normal methods techniques used in developing systems and procedures, he studied these projects in terms of possible machine application for either IBM high-speed giant computers or conventional accounting equipment. One project was the study of the Machine Ordering procedure with the objective of simplifying and mechanizing it and at the same time improving the source information to provide for a more complete analysis of sales and production backlog.

Filtering out the "hot" projects

Promoted the same year

By December of the same year, Bob was promoted to his present job—Administrative Assistant to the Controller of the Data Processing Division. "The first function of an Administrative Assistant," says Bob, "is to filter out the 'hot' projects from those that can be handled later. You follow through on projects assigned by the controller and keep him posted on their progress." Bob's new position affords a pleasant diversification of work: charting divisional responsibilities of the controller's function... plans for decentralization... costs of regionalization... summarizing key financial and statistical information for presentation to top management.

Bob points out that there are many areas in Business Administration at IBM for men with an M.B.A. or a B.S. in accounting: corporate, general, and factory accounting; internal audit; methods; payroll and taxes. Administrative and management positions constantly open up at World Headquarters, IBM's 183 branch offices, many plants and laboratories.

Why Bob picked IBM

Bob made a careful study of existing opportunities before selecting IBM for his career. He had a dozen campus interviews; took nine company tours. IBM's M.B.A. program interested him—because, as he says, "It gave me a chance to review the entire company before starting an actual line assignment." He was intrigued by the increasing use of data processing equipment in finance and he knew that IBM was a leader in this field. Salary-wise, he found IBM better than many, but it was company growth potential that motivated his choice. "Opportunity certainly exists at IBM," he says. "Growth factors alone will account for many new executive positions. A second factor is the trend toward decentralization, which also creates new jobs. These factors, plus IBM's 'promote-from-within' policy, add up to real opportunity."

"Opportunity certainly exists at IBM"

IBM hopes that this message will help to give you some idea of what it's like to be in Business Administration at IBM. There are equal opportunities for E.E.'s, M.E.'s, physicists, mathematicians and Liberal Arts majors in IBM's many divisions—Research, Product Development, Manufacturing Engineering, Sales and Sales Assistance. Why not drop in and discuss IBM with your Placement Director? He can supply our latest brochure and tell you when IBM will next interview on your campus. Meanwhile, our Manager of College Relations, Mr. P. H. Bradley, will be happy to answer your questions. Write him at IBM, Room 10001 690 Madison Ave., New York 22, N. Y.
