Dr. Niebuhr: Three Forms Of Faith Bid Attention

Three forms of faith are continuously bidding for the attention of Western man, Dr. H. Richard Niebuhr, Professor of Theology and Christian Ethics at Yale University Divinity School, said Monday night.

Dr. Niebuhr, 1957 Montgomery Lecturer at the University, spoke at Love Library Auditorium.

"The faith of men in all times seems on examination to appear in two main forms," Dr. Niebuhr said, "which we may call its polytheistic and monotheistic forms, or to use non-theological terms—the pluralistic and social types."

"In general that form of faith which nationalism represents is the characteristic monotheistic form. The reality for the sake of which men live in this form of faith is the tribe, the nation, the civilization or ultimately mankind itself."

He said that this type of faith, also expressed in ethics, customs and laws, has the collective as its center and is designed for the maintenance of the collective life.

The second form of faith, polytheism, seems to have had its counterpart in many periods of history, modern civilization as well as in the late Roman Empire.

In its modern form it appears as the cultivation of art for the sake of art, of science for the sake of science, of religion for religion's sake, or morals for the sake of right. Faith, as trust and loyalty, is divided among many beings. On the whole such polytheism only achieves compromises among the various causes and objects of qualified trust, Dr. Niebuhr said.

The third form of faith, Dr. Niebuhr said, is radical monotheism.

"In terms of faith it is the trust of selves in isolation and in community on the One beyond all the many as the center of all value," he said. "It is the confidence that whatever is, is good, because it exists as one thing among the many that have their origin in the One."

"Radical monotheism, as the faith which puts its confidence in the value of any and all existence, in the principle of being as the center of value and which is challenged to universal loyalty has two consequences: It relativizes every particular being; it de-thrones all absolutes except the principle of being itself. And at the same time it recognizes value in whatever is. Its two great mottoes are—I am the Lord thy God, thou shalt have no other gods before me; and, whatever is, is good."

Dr. Niebuhr will deliver the second in a series of three lectures Wednesday at 8 p.m.

A seminar for graduate students and faculty members will be held on the fourth floor of Love Library from 10 to 12 a.m. Tuesday, according to Charles Patterson, head of the philosophy department.

The topics that Cerf lectures on are, "Modern Trends in Literature and Humor, Changing Styles in American Humor, What Are the Movies and Television Doing to Literature Today?, Authors I Have Known, and The Publishing Business Today."

As the president of Random House, Cerf has been the sponsor of many newcomers in the field of writing. This interest in stimulating the creative endeavors of young people everywhere has made him a popular speaker on college and university campuses all over the country.

Bennet Cerf, the publisher, has given the public such books as "Guadacanal Diary," a manuscript which he read, decided to publish and contracted within 8 hours, "Thirty Seconds Over Tokyo," "The Snake Pit," and "Don't Go Near the Water." His 27 years of work with books and their writers have given Cerf a comprehensive view of the literature of the times.

Cerf is the author of seven best selling collections of humorous stories including "An Encyclopedia of Modern American Humor," "Try and Stop Me," "Shake Well Before Using," and "Good For a Laugh."

Cerf's start in the publishing field came after his purchase of the Modern Library Series in 1925. Immediately he began the job of transforming this series into a set of modestly-priced classics available to the public.

Commenting on this venture, Life Magazine said: "Cerf's attractively bound Modern Library Series has probably done more to make literary classics available to the U. S. public than any other enterprise in the history of U. S. publishing."

Cerf can be seen every week on the panel-show, "What's My Line."

publisher of the Seward County Independent.

Also on the list of awards at the dinner will be recognition of the outstanding senior woman journalist at the University by Dr. William E. Hall, Director of the School of Journalism.

Sponsored by the University's chapter of Theta Sigma Phi, woman's professional journalism fraternity, the dinner is expected to attract journalists from throughout the state. Approximately 100 reservations have been made to date, according to Theta Sigma Phi officers.

The annual event, planned as a salute to women journalists in Nebraska, will focus attention on the contributions being made by the state's newspaperwomen.

The contest to select the most outstanding of these newspaperwomen drew about 40 entries from throughout the state in three categories: spot news, features and women's page stories and columns.

Scrolls will be given to category winners in both the weekly and daily division while the grand prize winner in each field will receive a plaque.
