Don Whitehead:

Journalism Day Features Writer

Don Whitehead, a two-time Pulitzer Prize winner for reporting, will be the featured speaker at the University's annual Journalism Day celebration Saturday at 6:30 p.m. in the Union ballroom, according to Dr. William Hall, Journalism School director.

Whitehead, veteran Associated Press correspondent and now Washington bureau chief for the New York Herald Tribune, has also written a best seller, The FBI story, selling 150,000 copies for the first five weeks.

He will deliver the 28th annual Don Mellett lecture in journalism speaking on "The FBI; Revelation and Law Enforcement," according to Dr. Hall.

The Mellett lecture, sponsored by the New York University, is delivered each year on a different campus. It was established in memory of Don Mellett, a Canton, Ohio, newspaperman who was murdered in 1926 because of his crusade against vice and corruption in the city government.

Starting out in the weekly field, Whitehead transferred to the Associated Press, where he became a night editor. During the second World War he saw action as a war correspondent in Africa and Europe.

Whitehead won his first Pulitzer Prize in 1951 for a series of stories he wrote after witnessing the fall of Seoul to Communist troops. His second Pulitzer prize followed within three years. It was given to him for his day-to-day log of President Eisenhower's post-election trip to Korea.

The second part of the Journalism Day will be highlighted by the presentation of 52 awards. These awards will be given as 15 silver keys and 30 honorable mentions for outstanding achievement in high school journalism.

News writing, sports writing, feature writing, editorial writing and columns are the five categories in which the prizes will be awarded. There will be three winners from each of the divisions. Each high school is divided into three classes based on size schools with 1,125 students enrolled, 126-599 students enrolled and 600 or more students enrolled.

Dr. Hall will present both the keys and the honorable mention certificates to the winners.

The First Annual Lincoln Journal and Star Freshman Scholarship in Journalism will be presented by Walter White, publisher of the Star. These scholarships consist of two $200 scholarships for outstate students and four $100 scholarships for Lincoln high school students.

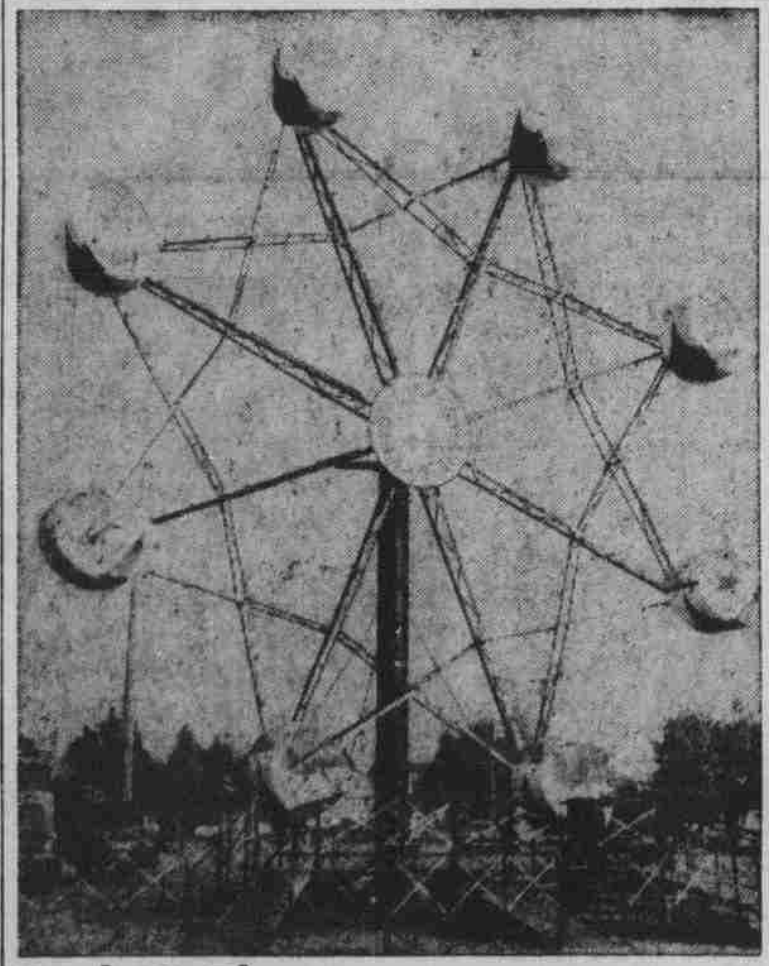

Mr. Joseph W. Seacrest will present the annual Joseph C. Seacrest Scholarship to "the University senior in Journalism who made the most outstanding record and wants to follow in a professional study in Journalism." This scholarship is to work towards a master's degree in Journalism. Joseph W. Seacrest was publisher and founder of the Lincoln Journal and in his memory his son will present this award.

Attending the Journalism Day will be University Journalism majors, MHS silver key and honorable mention winners and their advisors plus any senior seriously interested in journalism as a career and Nebraska professional newspapermen.
