Construction is slated to begin immediately.

The building will be equipped with a 31 foot dome and instruments which can project onto the dome the constellations as seen at any time on any night of any year—from 1000 B. C. to 2957 — from any place on earth.

Melvin Stecher and Norman Horowitz, American duo-pianists, will present the first program of the summer Artists Series in the Union Ballroom at 8 p.m. Wednesday, according to Bob Handy, Union activities director.

Stecher and Horowitz appeared in Lincoln in February with the Roger Wagner Chorale.

Born and educated in New York City, the young pianists have performed as soloists as well as part of a team and were featured in stage presentation at the Radio City Music Hall.

The team has been acclaimed as the one of the most outstanding duo-piano teams in the country, Handy said.

Four other programs for the Artists series are planned, Handy continued.

On June 26 the Irish Players, "Dermot McNamara and Miss Michael Conaree, will present excerpts from four great dramas. "The Importance of Being Earnest", "Shadow and Substance" "Pygmalion" and "The Playboy of the Western World" will make up the program.

McNamara toured with the Dublin Players and has appeared on several television shows, including Studio One, "Kraft Theater" and "Omnibus".

Miss Conaree has a Masters Degree in Fine Arts from Boston University and has appeared in nearly forty American Productions.

Rod Strong, dancer and currently featured in "New Faces of 1956" will appear at the Union on July 10.

The young dancer with an international reputation has the unprecedented honor of being invited to dance at the command performance for the President of France at the Paris Opera House for two years in succession, according to Handy.

On July 17, the "Summer Symphony" will present a concert by the University Symphony, which consists mostly of summer session music students, David Foltz, director, said.

On July 24 the University Choral Concert will feature students under the direction of Foltz, chairman of the Music Department.

Regents Study NU Retirement

The University's policy of retiring faculty members at the age of 65 will be reviewed by a committee of Regents soon to be appointed by Dr. B. N. Greenberg, president.

The authorization came after C. Y. Thompson had read a letter, whose author was not revealed, suggesting that the present procedure be changed so that faculty members would be allowed to submit to health examinations at the age of 65. Any member found mentally and physically competent would be given the opportunity of continuing in his position "as long as his services are beneficial to the University."

Chancellor Hardin called for serious consideration of the problem but pointed out that the state retirement law system would not permit the accumulation of pension after the age of 65. He said that at present retirement is made official at the age of 65 and that given to older professors in some cases.

The Chancellor also suggested a plan whereby administrators would work, and make excellent contributions to their fields."

The Ogden Utah Boys Chorus and Trumpet Choir will appear Sunday at 7:30 p.m. in the Union Ballroom, according to Bob Handy, Union Activities Director.

The program will consist of all types of music, including westerns, spirituals, ballads, classical and modern compositions, Handy said.

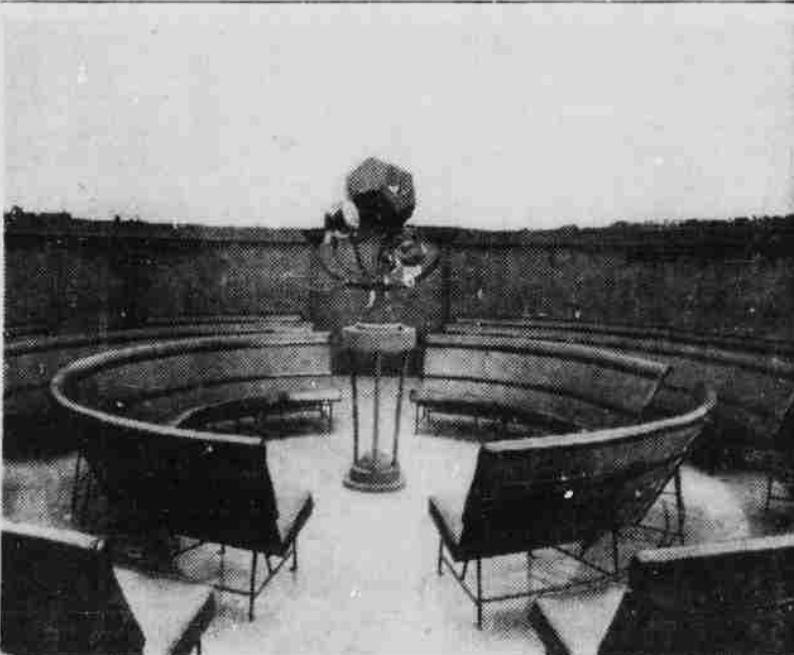

After the program the usual Sunday night movie will be shown. This week's presentation is "The Great Caruso", starring Mario Lanza and Ann Blyth.

Admission to both programs is free, Handy said.

No parking permits will be needed in order to park on campus during summer sessions, according to the University police department.

Faculty parking areas will still be restricted to faculty members until 2 p.m. weekdays and until noon on Saturday. Regulations forbidding parking on green and red lines will continue to be enforced.
