

Band Plays For Many

Two musical aggregations which are an important part of the University are the renowned Cornhusker Band and the University Symphony Orchestra. These two musical groups perform at a variety of campus functions and also for various community activities.

The Cornhusker Band, composed of over 200 members, is actually divided into three separate organizations. The ROTC marching band is made up solely of male musicians. This band performs at football games, parades, and ROTC retreats. During the halftime of the football games women band members enact skits on the field accompanied by the male band members. The band travels to one out-of-town football game each season. The Marching Band traveled to Boulder this past season where they performed during the half time of the Nebraska-Colorado football game. On Band Day the Nebraska band participates with the out-state high school bands in a downtown parade and in the half time show of the Band Day football game.

The Symphonic Band, composed of 80 musicians, plays for the spring concert at the Coliseum and makes a concert tour of various Nebraska towns. In addition, they play for such events as Ivy Day and Commencement. These two alternate playing for the basketball games. The bands this past season included some "rock 'n roll" music in their repertoire at the request of coach Jerry Bush.

These two bands are under the direction of Donald Lentz. Mr. Lentz just returned from a four month tour of the Orient where he collected the native music of the region. A third band, under the direction of Jack Snider, performs during the concert season, on Ivy Day, and it, too, presents a spring concert.

Under the direction of Jack Snider who replaced Emanuel Wishnow who spent the past year studying in Europe, the University Symphony Orchestra assists with many productions of the School of Fine Arts, as well as performing several concerts during the year. During the last season, the orchestra furnished accompaniment for "The Messiah", the seniors elected as soloists by their class, and the Music School Faculty; and performed the "Elegy for a Dead Soldier" with the University Singers. They, too, went on the road and played concerts for various Nebraska towns.

Students Find Work Through Job Service

An employment service is maintained by the University of Nebraska to help students find jobs if they wish to work while attending classes.

The pay for the part-time positions is determined by previous experience and wage scales at the time of employment.

Positions are available for working in private homes. This work requires about 25 hours each week in return for room, board, and money to cover lunches and transportation.

Applicants are sent to homes for interviews after the homes have been approved by the University employment service.

Students may find part-time clerking positions in Lincoln stores. The stores especially need help on Thursdays and Saturdays. There is door-to-door sales work for men on a commission basis.

Table-waiting and food service jobs may be secured in University Residence Halls, campus cafeterias, sorority houses and in Lincoln's eating establishments.

RIGHT NUMBER?

Jan Turner and "Skip" O'Halloran, both juniors at the University, are keeping in touch with the gang, from the Men's University Shop at Simon's . . . it's a shop that's authentically furnished in ole University manner and has the authentic University clothes the fellows want.

On Fourth Floor there's a Campus Room for gals, and College Board members will be in both these shops to help you select exactly the right clothes for your college wardrobe. Come in and meet our Board soon.

1215 O St., Lincoln

ben Simon's