

Elsie Ford Piper Hall . . . (Story At Right)

Girl's Opinions Vary:

New Piper Hall Breaks With Ivy Way

By JAN NISKER
Daily Nebraskan Reporter
What's happening to tradition on the University campus? That seemed to be the cry at the beginning of the semester when the freshmen refused to buy or wear the customary freshmen beanies.

Here is a new "tradition question". What is happening to the storybook picture of the college with ivy-covered gates and ivy laden buildings? What is going to happen to the ivy-covered traditions when those tradition-minded people find that ivy won't even grow on the modern walls of Elsie Ford Piper Hall?

The new women's dormitory, completed in August, has four floors of rooms furnished with modern furniture and lighting. Spacious closets and numerous shelves adorn two of the walls and each room contains an individual air conditioning unit to keep its occupants from sweltering during the warmer months of the school year.

The built-in desks and bulletin boards offer greater utilization of space and give the room a modern, but homey atmosphere. The exterior of Piper Hall reveals the big picture windows of each room and its pastel colored walls are smooth and "untraditional". Piper Hall is directly connected with Love Hall, a colonial style, red brick structure with pillars adorning the front stairs, and ivy clinging to the rough surface of the old red brick.

In a survey conducted by the Daily Nebraskan, students were asked what they thought of Piper Hall interrupting the tradition of ivy-covered walls on the campus. Shirley Blecha, Arts and Science freshman says, "I love dorm life, but it would have been in so much better taste to have Piper Hall the colonial style that the rest of the dormitory is."

Eleanor Resnick, another Arts and Science freshman says, "Everywhere architecture is becoming modern. It is the up-and-coming thing to have Piper Hall in modern style, but if they were planning to connect it to Love Hall, they should have tried to remodel the older halls and in that way, keep the entire outside in a modern trend."

Pat Bredthauer, an upperclass counsellor in Piper Hall says, "I like Piper Hall. I lived in Love Hall last year, and I do miss having individual sinks in the rooms, but I wouldn't change. As for its exterior, Piper Hall should have definitely been colonial style. I like modern styles, but the two just do not go together."

Bonnie Beal, an Arts and Science freshman said that when she first saw the two buildings, they looked funny together. Now she doesn't notice the difference as much.

Lynn McClaffin, Bus. Ad. sophomore who lives in Love Hall commented, "When looking at the outside of the buildings, everything looks disjointed. The modern and old style does not show any unity whatever, and it looks as if it were done in bad taste. If it were done in bad taste, it would have been in so much better taste to have Piper Hall the colonial style that the rest of the dormitory is."

Mrs. M. A. Hurley, Head Resident of Raymond Hall, says, "As for living in the halls, one is as good as the other. Girls are the same all over. I am quite disappointed, however, in the way the two buildings are joined. The original floor plan called for the addition to be connected in an "L" shape as Love and Raymond Halls are connected. If they had to change the style of architecture, they should have built the new building on the 17th Street side.

Dorothy Sellentin, undeclared freshman commented, "The rooms in Piper Hall are so much homier than the older halls. They are more conducive to study. It does do away with ivy-covered tradition, but new traditions have to start somewhere."

KD, Delta Sig Pleges Collect Old Clothing

Old clothing will be collected by the Kappa Delta and Delta Sigma Phi pledges for "Operation Christmas," a project designed to clothe Korean orphans for the winter.

The sweaters, scarves, skirts, trousers, shoe, and other clothing will be sent to children between the age of two and fifteen.

The pledges will pick up clothing on the campus during the next few days. Anyone wishing to contribute may contact Ken Flickinger, Delta Sigma Phi, or Barbara Millnitz, Kappa Delta.

THE FOUNDATION and YOU...

Newest addition to the University Museum's Hall of Nebraska Wildlife is the display of the Great Blue Heron in its natural surroundings.

This is the eighth habitat group to be completed. When the Hall is finished, a total of 16 displays will be shown.

Funds were made available for the development of this Hall through contributions received by the University of Nebraska Foundation.

The Foundation is proud of the part it plays in helping our alumni and friends help the University.

Council Considers Expenses

The Student Activities Committee suggested at its meeting Monday that only necessary expenses which will promote the general welfare of the University and are directly related to the furtherance of the expressed aims and purposes of organizations shall be deemed proper.

This move was made as a recommendation to the Faculty Committee on Student Organizations and Social Functions.

Expenditures for social activities for the benefit of a limited number of students shall not be approved unless adequate funds are collected in advance from those participating.

Though a motion was made to accept the recommendation, it was decided that action be postponed until the next meeting when the recommendation will again be read.

The All-University Parking Committee is well aware of the present condition of parking lots, and plans are being made to improve it, announced Dave Keene.

All appeals to the Parking Board will be typed in triplicate to provide copies for the campus police, Dean Colbert's office, and the Parking Board, and the form of the appeals will be the same as that used last year, according to Herb Friedman.

KNUS Commences Drive To Create Larger Campus Student Audience

KNUS, University radio station, has started a drive to expand its listening audience.

Station officials have sent letters to all Greek organizations seeking their support of KNUS to broadcast on a Lincoln Program Service band.

KNUS now reaches the dorms on campus through a wired broadcasting system, but do not have such facilities to reach the fraternities and sororities.

The University station is not licensed to do wireless broadcasting. Its programs, therefore, can be heard only on a closed channel or wire hookup. Program service, station officials said, is the most economical and feasible wired system presently available to reach the fraternities and sororities.

The KNUS letter to the houses said:

"KNUS radio, your campus radio station, is staffed by students of the University and is the radio voice of the student campus. Your opinions and preferences determine the type of programming we will provide.

"We are expanding our coverage at the present time. We will be able to reach your house through Program Service if you will merely designate which of the commercial channels you prefer to drop.

"In order to assure you of the type of programming you will most enjoy, please also check your preference on the enclosed sheet. If you act promptly on this matter we can provide this service to your house immediately."

The letter was signed by Leroy Rockwell, former general manager of KNUS, and the action had been favored by the entire staff, including Al Anderson, the new general manager.

Don Russell, University director of radio and television, said he was also very much in favor of expanding the KNUS program.

"I think an expansion of KNUS services would lead to greater interest in the campus station and closer inter-departmental cooperation in fields related to radio, in addition to benefiting a greater number of students."

Russell cited the aid it would be to both business administration and journalism students interested in radio work.

"Business administration students could get actual experience in selling for commercial radio and journalism students could receive good background in radio news-writing and continuity writing."

Russell said numerous students apparently were reluctant to work at KNUS now because they felt they were not being heard. "Many students argue that when they work for something like the student paper others can see their work in print, but that they will be heard by only a limited number of students if they work on the station.

"KNUS has wonderful facilities, but only half a voice at the present time because of this limitation in its audience," Russell said.

The instructor added that he felt the University station could eventually expand its services in other areas, including educational programming to various schools during the earlier part of the day.

Program service is a private organization which sells its service to businesses and other groups interested in special programming. The broadcasting bands of the wired service include a special program service channel and bands for KFAB, WOW and KFOR.

Most fraternities and sororities subscribe to this service.
