Military Shipments

The United States has stopped delivery of military shipments to Yugoslavia after a request by Marshal Tito that the seven-year-old program be halted. Tito was reportedly irritated by continued State Department reviews of the program. Yugoslavia has received more than a billion dollars worth of arms from the U.S. since 1950.

Ike Checkup

President Eisenhower will receive a physical checkup today to determine if he is sufficiently healthy to attend the NATO conference in Paris on Dec. 16-18. The results of the examination will probably be made public immediately after the doctors finish the checkup, according to James Hagerty, White House press secretary.

Wiretapping

Wiretap evidence obtained by state officers under authority of federal court trials, according to a Supreme Court decision. The decision, which reversed a decision by the U.S. Circuit Court in New York, means that the government cannot use state-obtained wiretap evidence in the perjury case against James Hoffa, president-elect of the Teamsters Union.

'Bye Santa'

An Anglican churchman in Darford, England, has labeled Santa Claus a "mence". The Rev. Peter Collins said the Christmas character should take his reindeer back to the North Pole and never darken chimneys again. The vicar argued that "Christ alone makes Christmas" after reading that a home for Santa Claus is being operated in the United States.

Indonesian Woes

The Indonesian government has placed all Dutch-owned plantations and allied factories, research institutions and enterprise under the direct supervision of the government. The step was taken after three major Dutch banks failed to open Monday.

Just Don't Exist:

Air Force Comments On Saucer Rumors

By CAROL LANGHAUSER Recent sightings of unknown flying objects reported across the nation have rekindled interest in the subject of flying saucers, according to the Nebraska Reporter of the Army Military District, Nebraska.

After exhaustive investigations and evaluations of such reports, the Air Force says there is no evidence that:

These objects were hostile; they were inter-planetary space ships; they represented technological developments outside of our present day scientific knowledge; they are a threat to our national security; and finally, there is no physical or material evidence that even a minute fragment of a flying saucer ever has been found.

Virtually all of these reported mysterious activities in the skies have been satisfactorily resolved. The capable scientists and engineers, headed by Dr. Allen Hynek, professor of astrophysics and astronomy at Ohio State University, have been completely objective and open-minded about the reports, the Air Force said. Many of the unusual observations are explained by the fact that some 4,000 weather and research balloons, varying from four to 200 feet in diameter, are released daily. These give weird appearances in the night with their running lights. Also when viewed near dawn or sunset there is an odd sight because of the effect of the slanting rays of the sun upon the balloon surface.

Large balloons, if caught in jet streams, can take on horizontal shapes and move at speeds near 200 miles an hour or may flatten out on top to give startling effects.

Under adverse weather conditions, modern aircraft, particularly those with swept or delta wings, are reported as flying saucers. When observed at high altitudes with sunlight reflecting from their surfaces, the planes yield images ranging from disc to cigar shapes. Vapor trails also give strange appearances as they glow in the daylight.

Bright stars, planets, meteors, comets and other celestial bodies have been called saucers when seen through haze, light fog, moving clouds or dirty glasses.

Attempts to observe the skies through hand-held binoculars similarly have been the source of many reports.

Other things which yield eerie sights are caused by reflections, searchlights, birds, kiter blimps, spurious radar indications, hoaxes, firework displays, flares, fireballs and ice crystals.

The Air Force does not discourage reports of unusual observations but stresses the fact that a complete report of a bona fide sighting should be sent to the nearest Air Force activity. These will be investigated by the Air Defense Command.

In the most recent group of 46 unidentified objects all over the U.S., only three deserved further study, the Air Defense Command said.
