

Madrigals To Give Tenth Song Concert

By SUE HAMMOND
Staff Reporter

This year marks the tenth full season for the Madrigal Singers, as they plan the highlight of their Christmas season, their annual concert to be held Thursday at 7:30 p.m. in the Union Ballroom.

Madrigal singing means unaccompanied and recreational singing, according to John Moran, the director of the concert, although, he added that on Thursday night the singers would be accompanied during some of the carols.

The Madrigal Singers of the present carry on that 16th and 17th highly developed art of singing, Moran said. They have revived the old idea of music into a style which has become quite popular all over the country.

Moran explained that in the 16th and 17th century, the people would gather at the home of one person, eat, sit at the tables and sing. The programs today are presented while the singers are seated around a table, covered with white cloths and set with candles, goblets and a punch bowl in traditional 16th century Madrigal style.

It was considered a social grace in those times to be able to sing the light, delicate, precise style, and if a person could play his part well in the Madrigal, he was considered desirable.

The listeners are meant to think of the performance as a gathering of good friends to enjoy good music, conversation, refreshments and the evening together.

The subject matter of madrigals ranges through every conceivable facet of life—religion, politics, dancing, drinking, card-playing, conversation, nature, death and all other phases of human thought and experience.

The twenty-one members of the select group at the University include outstanding sophomores and freshmen, who don't necessarily have to be music majors.

This year's Madrigal concert is being sponsored by the University Music Department and the Union Music Committee.

The committee, headed by Karen Peterson, is carrying out an Old English theme for the decorations.

Selections for the concert, directed by John Moran are a group of the traditional carols, including: "O Come All Ye Faithful," "Away in a Manger," "God Rest Ye Merry Gentlemen," "It Came Upon A Midnight Clear," "Hark the Herald Angels Sing," "O Little Town of Bethlehem" and "Silent Night."

Other selections that will be presented are: "Twas the Night Before Christmas" and "Jingle Bells." "Song of Christmas with Carol Ashbury and Rodney Walker as narrators; "Deck the Halls," "Lullaby on Christmas Eve" featuring Gale Miller as Soloist, "Patapan."

IFC To Hold Christmas Party Tonight

Seventy-five children from Cedars Home, Whitehall and Tabitha Home will be the honored guests at the IFC Orphans Christmas Party to be held Wednesday from 7-8:30 p.m. in the Union Ballroom, according to Jim Whitaker, co-chairman.

Entertainment will be provided by Dave Meisenholder at the organ, Jim Peterson playing his banjo and the Lincoln High Girl's Octet. Santa Claus will then distribute gifts to each of the orphans and refreshments will be served.

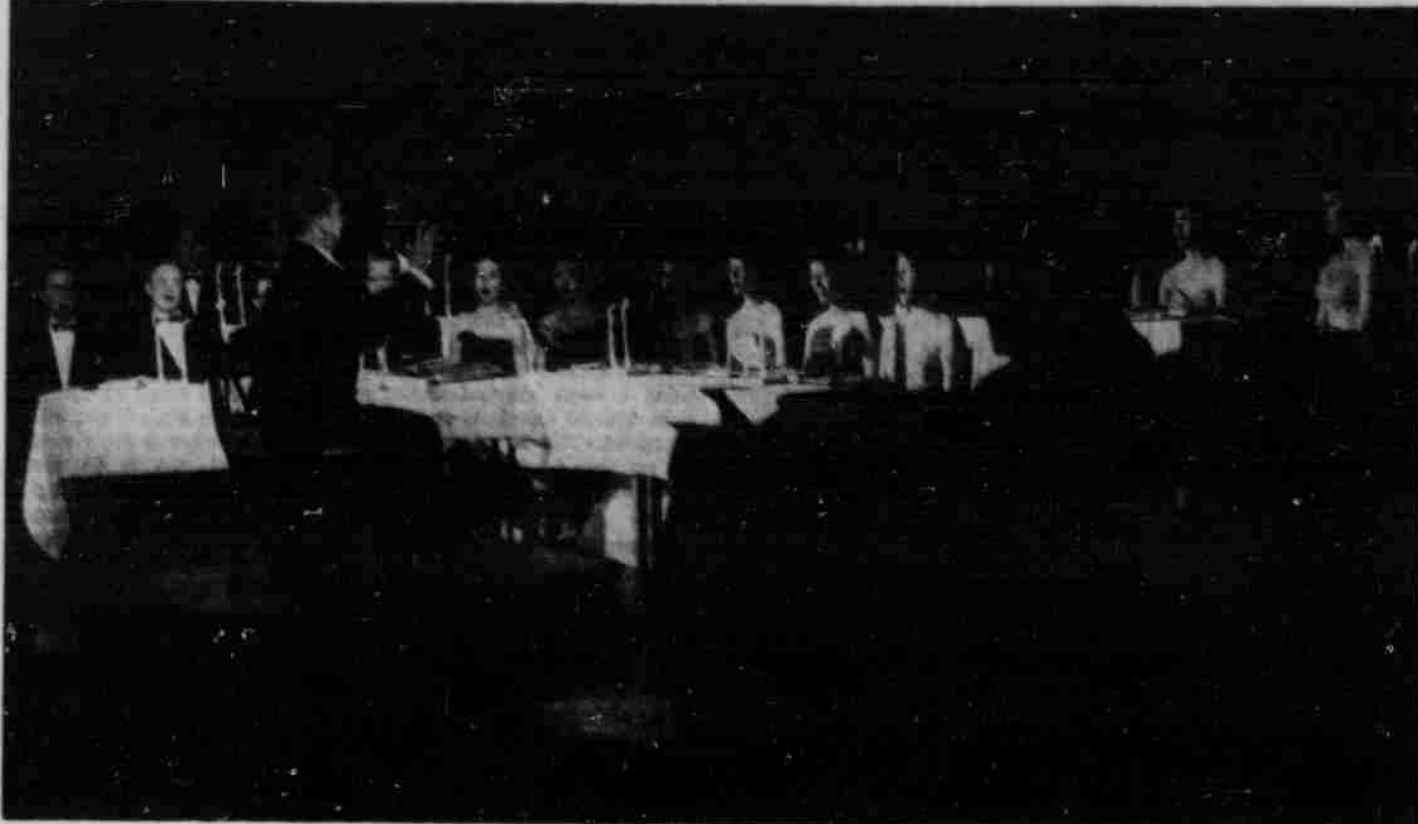

The Junior IFC and three members from each fraternity will attend the party.

"We are asking the co-operation of all the fraternities to make this party as successful as possible, because this may be the only touch with Christmas these children will have this year," commented Dick Arneson, IFC president.

Faculty Members To Attend Meeting

Eight University faculty members will participate in the 50th anniversary winter meeting of the American Society of Agricultural Engineers (ASAE), this week in Chicago.

Agricultural engineering faculty members who will attend the meeting include: Department Chairman L. W. Hurlbut, H. D. Wittmuss, G. W. Steingruve, L. F. Larsen, P. E. Fishbach, M. L. Mumgaard and E. A. Olson.

Madrigal Concert

The Madrigal Singers present their annual concert Thursday night under the direction of John Moran. David Foltz directed the group last year as they presented the traditional program.

Madrigal means unaccompanied singing, according to Moran, although the University group may deviate Thursday from this pattern.

Crowd Goes Wild:

Ovations, Cheering Feature Coliseum Spirit Revival

By GEORGE MOYER
Staff Writer

The Nebraska Cornhuskers won a game Monday night and the Nebraska fans won a moral victory.

The moral victory was the improvement of Husker spirit. It was seen in the wild cheering of the fans every time Nebraska got the ball, standing ovations for players who had done a good job and widespread applause for a good play.

Also included was a general student participation in the organized cheering. Yell King, Bill McQuistan remarked about the cheering, "I think it's tremendous. It's great to know that the crowd is yelling with you and they're all behind the team."

According to Husker coach, Jerry Bush, the revival began with the final game of last year's season. "I think it all happened the last game last year when we beat Iowa State," Bush said. The win over Iowa State closed Bush's most successful season to date, and since it was an upset victory over a nationally ranked team, it provided fans with a real focal point for enthusiasm.

Another contributing factor to the improved spirit has been the band, according to Bush. Last season, the band began to play current jump tunes as well as the old spirit boosting standbys. This year, director Donald Lentz has added a few new touches including the playing of the school song, "There Is No Place Like Nebraska" after the national anthem and while the players are lining up on the floor.

Here again the crowd has shown its enthusiasm by rising and joining in with the words. Monday, most of them sang with gusto and those who didn't know the words were humming the melody.

Still another place where spirit begins cannot be overlooked. The Nebraska bench often inspired the crowd to further cheering by rising from their seats to applaud a great play by their mates on the floor. Bush said of his team, "All the teams I've had down here have had good spirit. All the boys get up around the huddle this year and they all yell."

Bush's club has also pleased the crowd with the fancy passing and shooting drills they go through before the game. "The main thing on the warmups," according to Bush, "is to get the boys loosened up." However, the warmup also loosens up the crowd. Fans sitting behind the scorers desk Monday remarked that they came early to watch Nebraska warm up.

Appropriation Given To NU For Research

The University has received $20,000 from the Nebraska Heart Association for a professorship in heart research.

Receiving a like appropriation was Creighton University in Omaha. The money will support the work of Dr. Denham Harman and will also cover research assistants, equipment and supplies.

Dr. Harman has been investigating the process of aging and atherosclerosis (thickening and hardening of artery walls) which leads to heart disease.

Both medical schools have already received $9,000 each for other heart research and $10,000 is being put into a heart research reserve to guarantee support for the newly created professorships for one year past any possible expiration of heart association support.
