Professor Hits NU Dual Matriculation

The supply of teachers can be increased only by making it simpler for students not in Teachers College to prepare to teach, Boyd Carter, Professor of Romance Languages said.

In an article written for the Omaha World Herald, Carter said that this would not rob Teachers College of students; rather it would encourage students in other colleges who under present circumstances do not prepare to teach, to choose teaching as a career.

Carter pointed out that for approximately 20 years it has not been possible for students registered in Colleges of Arts and Sciences and Business Administration to get a teaching certificate without also matriculating in the Teachers College.

He predicted that if dual matriculation were abolished, at least 100 students in Arts and Sciences not now planning to teach, would be willing to meet certification requirements.

The language professor said that dual matriculation was objectionable principally because the procedure discourages students in Arts and Sciences from electing teaching as a career.

It seems unreasonable, he said, that the college that teaches the subject matter should have no voice in certification.

Students have the impression that to teach they must get their degree in Teachers College. The procedure has acquired a bad reputation among students because of pressures exerted on prospective dual matriculators to leave Arts and Sciences and enroll in Teachers College, Carter added.

The rumor exists, Carter implied, among Arts and Sciences students that practice teaching supervisors accord preferred treatment to Teachers College students.

Show 'Future Promise': Graduate Student Reviews Gifted Children In College

Should gifted children enter college at an early age? This question is closely related with the present concern over the critical need for educated men and women in science, mathematics, and other fields.

A University graduate may have part of the answer. She is Mrs. Gouri Mukherjee, a graduate student from India who this past summer completed a study of honor graduates from the University.

Her conclusions supported the value of accelerating the able student. She was able to state as a result of her study:

"The student who graduates early from high school gives indication of future promise and usefulness to society if allowed to enter college early and begin his life pattern as an adult early."

Honor Graduates

Mrs. Mukherjee studied 445 honor graduates from the classes of 1939 through '41, 1944 through '46, and 1949 through '51. She defined honor graduates as those University students whose grade average at graduation placed them in the upper three per cent of their class and who were graduated with distinction or high distinction.

What, then, are some of the early indicators of honor graduate status?

Honor graduates as a group were significantly younger at the time of high school graduation than the random sample of their classmates. The highest percentage of subjects in both groups were the 18-year-olds, but there was a slightly larger percentage of 16- and 17-year-olds among the honor graduates.

More than 90 per cent of the honor graduates ranked in the highest quarter of their high school class. 2.2 per cent ranked in the second quarter, 6.2 in the third, but none in the lowest quarter.

From what type of background did these honor graduates come? Two-thirds of the fathers had received a high school education. Thirty-two per cent of the mothers and 26 per cent of the fathers had bachelor degrees.

The occupation of the fathers shows that most of the honor graduates come from homes of fairly good socio-economic background. Farming was listed most frequently. The exception is the 16-year-old group which showed the highest percentage in the professional occupations. Seventy-five per cent of the mothers were housewives, while 15 per cent were engaged in professional work.

About 92 per cent of the honor graduates had no difficulty in securing employment. The study also shows that frequent job changes are not characteristic of younger graduates. The average age of marriage for the total honor group was 23.11

Bidding Revealed For Union Addition

George Cook Construction Company of Lincoln was apparent low bidder for the contract for general construction on the new $1,250,000 Union addition Tuesday.

Cook's bid still must be approved by the University Board of Regents which will meet this Saturday. The bid of $627,777 was the lowest of six bids submitted for general construction work by approximately $22,000. Other firms bidding for the contract were Westcott-Bowen, Kingery, Wilson, Assenmacher and Olson.

Cook previously constructed the married student housing project, $500,000 project on Ag Campus, for the University according to John Selleck, Corporation Secretary of the Board of Regents.

Should the Board of Regents approve the bid, it is possible that construction on the addition could start in the next three weeks.

Bids for mechanical and electrical construction were also read. Apparent low bidder for the mechanical construction was Riehard Plumbing and Heating Company, also of Lincoln. The Riehard bid was $466,935. Also bidding were Ray Martin, George H. Wenz, Natkin, and Newberg and Bookstrom.

Mason Electric Company of Lincoln was apparent low bidder on the electrical contract. The Mason bid of $94,750 edged those of Dodson, Commonwealth and ABC electrical companies.

Duane Lake, Union director, said, "We are very happy with the bids. Our architect estimated we got by approximately 7 per cent cheaper at this time."

New facilities that will be included in the addition are a ten-lane bowling alley, billiard room, drive-in, barber shop, laundry, and small auditorium. Expanded facilities will add a new kitchen, dining room, cafeteria, main lounge, enlarged Crib, three music listening rooms, a main ballroom, junior ballroom, 11 smaller meeting rooms and eight private dining rooms.

Funds for the addition are provided by student activity fees. The project does not include $200,000 in new furnishings which will be purchased under a separate contract.

Financing of the bowling alleys also is not included in the project.

The alleys will pay for themselves in fees. Contracts for the $120,000 alleys will be awarded in nine or ten months, according to Lake.

The completion date for all construction, set by Cook, is July 1st, 1959. Parts of the addition are expected to be opened as they are completed while corresponding parts of the old Union will close for renovation. Under this arrangement, the Union will be able to maintain serviced during construction, Lake said.

Alumni To Preserve Woodwork

Plans for the destruction of Ellen Smith Hall include the removal of much of the interior woodwork to be transported to new settings.

The University Alumni Association, in an attempt to preserve the atmosphere of one of the University's oldest and most memorable landmarks, will finance the removal of paneling and other woodwork, and storage and reinstallation in a memorial book nook for the new Union.

Considerable alumni interest has been indicated in this project "to preserve the fond memory of Ellen Smith Hall," according to Arnold Magnuson, secretary of the Alumni Association.

The book nook will occupy the 40 by 40 foot area where the present Union Roundup Room is located.

Architects are now working on plans for the new book nook. After they are completed and an estimate is derived, the drive for funds will begin, Magnuson said.

Charles Fowler, director of the division of buildings and grounds, said that the University has and will be cooperating fully in this Alumni Assoc. project.

After the Alumni Assoc. removes the woodwork it desires, bidding will then be opened for demolishing Ellen Smith Hall, Fowler said.
