Joan Takes Stand At Howell Tonight

Final University Theatre Product Will Appear Outstate in May

The Lark, Jean Anouilh's conception of Joan of Arc, opens this evening at the Howell Memorial Theater.

The University Players, under the direction of Dallas Williams, will present the last play of the season through Saturday, with curtain time set at 8 p.m.

But Saturday's performance won't be the last of Joan. Williams said that the play company will go to Wayne and Fremont for performances of the Lark the first and second of May.

"At Wayne we will present The Lark at the Teachers College and Fremont's production will be sponsored by Fremont High School, the director indicated.

Touring with a play isn't new to the University Players. Last fall the show "What Every Woman Knows" was presented at Bassett in connection with a drama clinic which the University Theater sponsored.

"We would like to take our last show of the season on tour each year," Williams said. The Wayne and Fremont performances will give the Players an opportunity to present the play before "foreign" audiences and give outstates an idea of what is being done at University Theater.

"The Lark" features Jacquie Miller as Joan and Don Montgomery and Cliff Souber as her inquisitors.

"Anouilh's play doesn't glorify Joan," Williams noted. "Rather it shows her as a very strong human being who retains her dignity in spite of the jeers and tribulations thrown at her by the society in which she lives."

The director noted that the play exemplifies Anouilh's mastery of style.

"To show that style off better, we are utilizing every bit of technical know-how at our disposal," he added. Dr. Charles Lown, technical director of the University Theater, is also technical "top man" for the play.

Anouilh's drama will be presented on a series of platforms utilizing some 70 light cues. Significant events in the life of Joan will be spotlighted in this manner.

Reservations can be made or tickets purchased for the production at the Howell Box office in the Temple Building.

"Splash-Off" Aquaquettes Sweat 'Launching'

The Aquaquettes have had almost as much trouble splashing off into outer space as the US had getting its satellite there.

"Splash Off," the annual water show, began having difficulties early during rehearsals. "Moon," one of the numbers in which boys join the girls in the exploration of outer space, had to be rewritten at almost every practice session.

Program Changes

Originally scheduled to feature 2 boys and 2 girls, John Holeman, Joe Stocker, Sally Laase and Lois Muhle, the first revision came when Lois Schroeder and Noel Schoenrock joined the group. After the number was rewritten to include 6, Schoenrock discovered that he would have to remain in New York after Easter, and the final piece went back to 4 swimmers.

Injuries have caused many program changes for the performance. Wendy Makepeace, secretary of the club, pinched a nerve in her arm and discovered she wouldn't be able to swim in the show.

A leg cast hampered Sharon Murphy for awhile, but she managed to recover sufficiently to have the cast removed. She plans to be in the show if her leg becomes strong enough by the time of the performance.

Staging Plans

The show will be given at 7:45 p.m. Thursday and Friday at the Coliseum Pool. Tickets are 50c and may be bought from Aquaquette members or at the door.

Staging difficulties have also plagued the swimmers.

"Plans call for a fountain in the center of the pool, but we are not yet sure if the hose will work," said Jo Devereaux, president. "We also need to find a circular object that floats to make the base for the fountain."

"Pluto," the comedy number, calls for 2 floating dogs made of chicken wire. The swimmers of the number will be beneath them and make them do the tricks.

The construction of the dogs and the manipulation of them have caused Mary Patrick, chairman of the number, all sorts of problems.

A third staging problem occurs in the "Stars" number.

Mobiles, Rockets

"We plan to have all of the girls swim holding sparklers," said Miss Devereaux. "We're keeping our fingers crossed that they will burn for the entire 13 minutes of the number."

Mobiles will hang in the pool area and rockets will be placed around the edge to give the pool the "outer space" atmosphere.

Colored lighting during the numbers will make them realistic or unrealistic, as the case may be.

Approximately forty people will participate in the show. Miss Alice Braunwarth, instructor of women's physical education, is the faculty adviser of the group.

Ag Overflows On Hospitality Day AGR Lures 100 Girls in Private Registration

Warm spring weather made the AGRs turn to thoughts of girls yesterday.

Enterprising members placed a large sign saying, "Welcome Home Ec Girls, Register Here" in front of their fraternity house and netted some 100 of the more than 600 high school girls who flocked to Ag campus for the annual Hospitality Day.

"We were only doing our duty in encouraging the girls to come to school next year," said member Larry Hendrix.

After the joke was explained to the girls, they were directed to the proper registration place. A day of learning more about the University's Home economics department followed.

Program

Chancellor Clifford Hardin, Dean William Lambert, Dr. Florence McKinney, professor of home economics, and Margaret Cannell, instructor of home economics, welcomed the girls to the University and told them about the home economics departments.

The visitors were divided into groups to visit the displays provided by the food and nutrition, clothing and textiles, design, house management, equipments, institutional management, vocational education and extension and research divisions of the department.

Included among the displays were actual construction problems in clothing and the preparation of foods.

Of interest to girls who plan futures in dietetics, institutional management, and foods in business was the Food and Nutrition Building display of "Build Your Future With Food". The Vocational Home-making Department highlighted "The Building of Teachers."

College To County

"Extending home Economics from the College to County" was presented by the Extension Division for girls interested in becoming home extension agents.

A display, "See Yourself in Print" was presented by the Home Ec Journalism students with "Crafts for You", "The HEM in Your Future", and "Decorators

Debaters Top Competitive Organization

The pair won 1 tournament, were undefeated at the University tournament, tied for 3rd at Winfield, Kansas, and tied for 4th at St. Thomas in Minneapolis, Olson said.

He added that, "We also won a number of superior ratings in extemporaneous speaking, oratory work, interpretative reading and discussion."

"All these people will be back next year," he continued, "and we should have a very good squad."
