U.S. Poetry Grows Up

Shapiro Writes Russian Orientation

The "coming of age" of American poetry and its characteristics as seen by Karl Shapiro will find its way into Russia in an article to be distributed this year by the U.S. Information Agency.

The article, "Recent American Poetry" is intended as an orientation to American for Russian readers.

As a proof that American poetry now has a place of its own, Shapiro writes that European universities now offer courses in American literature and poetry.

Shapiro surveys some of the work and techniques of certain younger poets, including Elizabeth Bishop, Marianne Moore, Randall Jarrell, Robert Lowell, Richard Wilbur and Richard Eberhart.

The still younger poets Shapiro divides into two groups—the University Poets and the self-styled Literary Underground.

The first group, he writes, represents the more traditional aspects of literature and the established institutions, while the "noisy" other group makes a point of detaching itself from anything and makes a "fetish of 'exile' from society."

Retiring commander Irwin was presented an engraved sabre on behalf of the twelve PR regiments in the United States.

The regiments also submitted a proclamation which hiked the rank of the National Commander from Brigadier General to Major General. The 6,500 Pershing Riflemen are organized like an Army division which is commanded by a two-star general.

The regiment, known throughout the South for its drill teams and well-disciplined units, ran off with more honors when their entry in the Honorary Commandant contest was chosen as winner.

Miss Martha Turner, a Zeta Tau Alpha from Centenary College of Shreveport, Louisiana, will reign as honorary Major General for the coming year.

Forty-two delegates representing 10 of the 12 regiments attended the convention.

ACP Poll Female Fashion Change Suits Majority Asked

Minneapolis (ACP) — Do women's fashions change too rapidly? Nearly half of the college men interviewed in the latest ACP National Poll of Student Opinion think so, but only about one-fourth of the coeds who were asked the question feel the same. Nobody—neither men nor the coeds—feel there isn't enough change, but the coeds were overwhelmingly of the opinion that the present change rate is all right.

To obtain this information, Associated Collegiate Press asked the following question of a random group of students chosen from American colleges:

"DO YOU THINK THE STYLE OF WOMEN'S CLOTHES CHANGES TOO OFTEN, NOT OFTEN ENOUGH, OR DO YOU THINK THE PRESENT RATE OF STYLE CHANGE IS ALL RIGHT?"

A complete tabulation of the results is as follows:

	Men	Wom.	Total
Style Change Too Often	37%	25%	30%
Don't Change Often Enough	—	—	—
Present Rate All Right	45%	69%	54%
Undecided	12%	3%	10%

Among the men interviewed, seniors are stronger in their belief that styles change too frequently. Over half of them feel this to be true, as compared with slightly more than a third of the freshman and juniors and nearly half of the sophomores. Broken down by classes, the men's opinions look like this:

	Fr.	Soph.	Jr.	Sen.
Style Change Too Often	31%	—	43%	43%
Don't Change Often Enough	—	—	—	—
Present Rate All Right	61%	51%	57%	57%
Undecided	8%	—	—	—

Although juniors and seniors are about evenly split on the issue, they have their opinions pretty well formed. None of the coeds interviewed in those two classes is undecided. Sophomore coeds differ quite sharply from their sister students on the matter of too much change. Not one of them interviewed feel style changes to be too frequent.
