

Math Frost Honor Courses Start This Fall

Honor courses in freshmen mathematics will be inaugurated this fall by the Department of Mathematics as a part of its overall honors program.

Dr. William G. Leavitt, chairman of the mathematics department, said three new courses have been designed for freshmen who have demonstrated "thorough competence in algebra and trigonometry, and show solid evidence of good ability and training."

Letters were sent this week to Nebraska high school principals and mathematics instructors asking for nominations. From these nominations, 25 of the top students in the freshman class will be selected, he explained.

The five hour credit course will be taught from a more rigorous point of view than is customary and some material in logic and set theory will be introduced, Dr. Leavitt said.

He explained since the course will be an advantage to students interested in its application as well as to those intending to go on in mathematics, students will be considered for the course without regard to their University major.

He observed that when the student finished the program, he should have a "fundamental understanding and grasp of the material" as well as the technical facility to use his mathematics.

Other features of the overall mathematics honors program include a special seminar started last fall in which students present papers on specialized areas of mathematics and the regular honors course open to upperclassmen.
