Courage and Action

Take courage and act. This is about the only advice that will do the University's sororities and fraternities any good.

The Daily Nebraskan thinks that to a degree the administrators are slightly off base by making their resolution without qualifications.

the all-girls average.

Summer rushing is not a sorority problem. It is a fraternity problem and partly because of the very fact that school administrators do little or nothing to encourage the presentation of an honest picture of the worthwhile role which a sound fraternity system can play in a student's life.

It was a vital decision, but I finally made it. It's taken almost two and a half years to finally make the definite choice, but now it is irrevocable.

When my fortune is made, instead of leaving money to the University to go into a Maxwell Aquarium, or a Maxwell Hall or a Maxwell reading nook and music room.

And to make it even more fun, I think that I will simply suggest that these additions be made, without making any ironclad stipulations on where to put them or in what arrangement.

Perhaps I'll put a P.S. on the memo, just suggesting that he take another look at the back of Love Library and make at least one "sitting under a tree" visit over near Ferguson and the old Ad building.

new landscaped area, wherever it may be.

On the other hand, a simple memo may not do, because it would take longer than that to explain the pond that is to be dug in what in our time is two parking lots severed by a stretch of brand new grass.

And so that students won't get their feet wet or be late dashing from Soc to Andrews (both of which by now should be completely renovated) let's have some kind of bridge—Not the plain, functional sort, but a bridge with personality of the type that would entice students to linger along the railing.

Then, too, a memo might not be adequate to suggest that some stone benches, or at least a few rustic wooden ones, be placed along the edges to give our kids a place to just sit down and look in the spring, fall and summer, and a spot to put on their ice skates in the winter.

Yup, this might be a bit more than a memo could handle, but between now and then I will figure out exactly how it should be phrased to give the number one building and grounder a chance to express some of his own ideas without submerging my 30-year plan.

The Briar Patch

Y e s, S n o - I r e l a n d

She stumbled down the stairs wearing her seven-inch heels (Sidney was three feet taller than she was) and nonchalantly sat down at the table knocking a pitcher of prune juice into the house-mother's lap.

At last the time came for the girls to pass the candied cake (no one passed it any more this year; it automatically went to Fifi). Momentarily seized with a fit of nervousness, Fifi burped, but, by the grace of the Goddess of Pinning, this was enough to extinguish the candle and glad shrieks of joy were once more heard in the pit of Mayta Mayta.

Meanwhile Sidney had risen from his chair in the dining quarters of Flu Doo and was reading the poem he had composed about his glorious pinning.

He then gave his bag of gum drops to the housemother and passed his box of splintered-tipped cigars to the brothers who stood around singing patriotic songs.

The stairs of the sorority house were lined with the sisters, each clutching in her sweaty palm a lily-white candle which was dripping hot wax on the new rug.

As soon as everyone had been pushed through the door (158 people were now huddled together in the Mayta Mayta hallway in a scene which resembled the first Berlin air raid) strains of the Mayta Mayta "Love Call" began to echo through the building.

Sidney blushed because he was embarrassed and Fifi blushed because her unmentionable was too tight.

Then they embraced tenderly as scattered giggles began.

Then Sidney, with 128 pounds of Mayta Mayta by his side, and Fifi with the golden crest of Flu Doo molded to her rib, galloped out the door to the blissful world which awaited them.

Sigh!

Collegiate Roundup—Imbibing ISC Coeds May Face Suspension

Administration officials at Iowa State have been urged by the ISC equivalent of AWS that women students caught possessing or drinking liquor in their resident or leaving the dorm overnight be suspended.

The recommendation followed a case earlier this year in which three women students were caught drinking in their dormitory room. The coeds were placed on conduct probation by the Office of Student Affairs.

The recommendation reads: "Any student found bringing liquor into the residences, drinking in the rooms and spending the night out would face temporary expulsion following a fair hearing before the Student Governing Committee."

The Tulsa Collegian printed the following article: "We've heard of a lot of arbitrary methods used by instructors, but a recent innovation of a TCU professor must set some sort of record. He charges fines for students who are tardy."

Dr. Kenneth Herrick, professor of insurance, charges each student late for his 8 a.m. class five cents for each time tardy. Purpose, he says, is to induce students to be on time.

Herrick himself pockets the fines collected. He sometimes collects as much as 50 to 75 cents a class.

What happens if the fines are not paid? A low grade, says the TCU student newspaper.

We realize that professors are often underpaid, but really, Dr. Herrick, couldn't you get a part-time job instead of forcing students to provide your pocket change?

A Tulsa College columnist offers an interesting comment on cheating.

Ten out of 14 students polled in a freshmen orientation session thought cheating was all right, he commented.

"Cheating cannot be unequivocally branded bad and cheaters looked upon as having no moral values... Whether to cheat or not is a question the individual student must decide. And the answer to the question hinges upon the reason he is attending college," he wrote.

Why They Attend The Tulsa writer then goes on to classify those who attend college according to why they attend. His categories: Those who seek an education to learn to live; those who seek to broaden their intellect; those who come to absorb the knowledge of the ages; then there are those who come for the prestige of having a diploma; those who attend for extra-curricular activities; those whose parents urge them to come; those who come to make more money after college and those who come to remain a part of the younger set.

For the latter group, he says, cheating is not necessarily bad, but a means to an end.

"Cheating is bad for those whose moral values say it is. But that doesn't make it bad for everyone," he concludes.
