

Color Photo Class Unavailable

No class will be offered in color photography next semester.

Journalism 177, advertising photography, will replace J-178, color photo graphy in the schedule. The advertising photography class will meet at the same time the color photo class was scheduled with lecture at 1 p.m. Mondays and lab from 2-5 p.m. "The change is being made to meet the needs of students who are switching into the new advertising major now offered by the J-School," according to Dr. William Hall, director.

Journalism 177 has been offered intermittently in previous years, Dr. Hall said.

EE Grad School Becoming Reality

By Carroll Kraus
The University department of electrical engineering, considered one of the better undergraduate departments of its type in the nation, may be on its way to becoming a top-rate graduate study department.

Full-fledged courses for electrical engineering applicants for masters degrees are being offered next semester. Prior to this the department had offered masters degree courses only in a reading course style with most of the study individual with special arranged discussions with professors.

More Candidates Apply
But now some 13 candidates have applied for advanced degrees, according to Dr. C. M. Hyde, associate professor of electrical engineering. Only three applied last year.

Four or five more students are expected to apply for the advanced study, said Hyde, who was instrumental in the development of the advanced study, said the record of some recent graduates has shown that the University has had a very excellent undergraduate program.

"We are trying for the same on the graduate level."

High Positions Held
Some of the positions held by recent grads include four posts on the staff of Massachusetts Institute of Technology, the presidency of a large electronics firm and responsible positions with corporations such as General Electric.

The success of the department has been one of keeping up with what's going on—constant modernizing of classes.

Advanced electrical circuits courses have been added. A two-course sequence on microwaves is available; a 200-level course on antilog computers is new.

Flexibility Developed
One of the major developments in the whole undergraduate program has been the development of flexibility in courses such as ones dealing with transistors, an innovation in the field.

The new 200-level courses have eliminated the need for major modification of these classes on amplifying devices in the future.
