IFC Passes Rush, Sneak Proposals

Amendment Voted Down; Enforcement Questioned

Limitation of high school rushing and regulation of pledge sneaks have resulted from IFC legislation Wednesday night.

The rulings passed as proposed by a special IFC committee selected to consider the problems.

Rushing Limitation
The high school rushing rule prohibits rushing of high school students during the period beginning with the termination of Rush Week and ending on June 1 with several exceptions such as All Sports Day and Saturdays of University home football games.

Tom Neff, IFC treasurer and member of Delta Tau Delta presented the resolution regulating pledge sneaks.

He explained that his fraternity had voted by a large majority Monday to have him take this action. (Delta Tau Delta was recently involved in a sneak incident in which an active was kidnapped.)

The ruling requires the pledge class to register information about the sneak at least one week prior to the date of the sneak with the executive Council of the IFC Pledge sneaks disrupting classes are prohibited.

Amendment defeated
An amendment to make the exceptions to the high school rushing rule include the Fridays before home football games was the only change proposed in the drafted proposals.

Neff emphasized in proposing the pledge sneak regulation that this in no way would mean that the IFC was condoning or encouraging pledge sneaks.

"It would only act as a restrictive measure upon those who plan to take them," Neff said.

Enforcement
The question of enforcement was dominant in the discussion of these restrictions and two general plans were mentioned.

Bob Krumme, IFC secretary, told the Daily Nebraskan that the IFC executive committee has the power to enforce any rulings which the IFC makes.

Any executive committee member must accept written charges of infraction when they are presented to him, Krumme said.

Come From Within
Bob Blair, Sigma Alpha Epsilon representative, answered the question of enforcement with the statement, "Any enforcement of these rules will have to come from within."

"Unless we have the intention of really obeying these regulations to the letter," Blair said, "we should not pass them."

Blair pointed out that most of the voting members of IFC were house presidents and that they thus had the power to enforce these regulations explicitly in their respective houses.

IDEAL NEBRASKA COED candidates chosen through interviews Tuesday night are: front row: Gretchen Saeger, Karen Peterson, Sally Downs; back row: Jane Savener, Karen Schuster. One of the coeds will be named to the title at the Coed Follies show Feb. 27.

Approximately 50 students from all colleges and universities in the state are expected to participate.

University All-Sports Day will be another featured event.

The Union activities director says Union activities director Bob Handy.

Records Soldout
Over 2,000,000 copies of the popular Capitol recording artists "Tom Dooley" have been sold.

According to Dorothy Beecher, Union president, it is "practically impossible" to purchase either of their albums "The Kingston Trio" or "From the Hungry Eye" in Lincoln.

The publisher is out and the factory is way behind on orders, she said.

Union Discouraged
The Union announced in 1957 that it had "reached the end of the line" as far as city-wide shows were concerned after only 2100 persons attended the opening night show of Pershing Auditorium.

The Roger Wagner Chorale was the featured attraction at this last big Union show.

The year before, 1956, the Union lost money on an opera they brought to the city, and in 1957 they also lost on the Tony Martin-Tex Beneke show and the Dunninger show.

Not Desert
The Fred Waring show in 1956 helped the financial situation but things went so poorly that the union intended to "get out of the field."

Union Manager Duane Lake said after the show in 1957, "I have never believed that Nebraska and especially Lincoln is a cultural desert, but looking back at the way people have shown interest in our programs, I am beginning to wonder."

The Kingston Trio has made numerous TV appearances and has played at 34 colleges across the country, selling out at most every performance.

Later Hours Probable At Library

Results of the recent Student Council library poll indicated that 43 per cent of the students polled want the library open on Sunday night.

In a report to the council Wednesday, Pat Flannigan, library committee chairman, said that it appeared the library would be extending their Sunday hours.

Week night hours may be extended for those students who need the library to study, she said.

A plan has been discussed under which the library would remain open until 9:30 p.m. with full services, and then remain open until 11 p.m. for study only, Miss Flannigan said.

Religious Emphasis Week was called "successful" by Rev. Rex Knowles, pastor of the Presbyterian-Congregational Student House.

"We didn't try to make a big splash," Dr. Knowles said. "We wanted to point out that religion is a real part of campus life, and I think Religious Emphasis Week succeeded in doing this."

He added that he thought that the week was improved using local rather than "outside" men.

University Celebrates 90th Birthday

Celebration '85: Show Came Tumbling Down

By Sondra Whalen
Although Charter Day 1959 will be observed quietly, this will probably be more agreeable with the Lincoln populace than an 1885 Charter Day effort.

With the discovery that the student newspaper, "The Hesperian," was approximately $20 in debt, staff members decided a Charter Day celebration would be just the thing to put them in the black, as well as showing proper University patriotism.

Plans
Elaborate plans for a gala show were made even including a German play. Practices began, advertising was started and tickets were sold with high hearts and hopes.

Then the roof fell in, or rather the show fell through. The German play was the last to withdraw, leaving the show sponsors two alternatives, according to the paper.

"... the board had to acknowledge their inability to get up a show or commit suicide individually and collectively."

Peril
They avoided both solutions however, and instead began advertising even more intensely. The show was for students only, they broadcast, city people should come "only at their peril."

Naturally, the "city people" came in droves.

After making sure the hall was filled and all 15 cents and 2 for 25 cents tickets were sold, the students proceeded to climb down ropes, out the windows and through back doors, leaving a small orchestra playing the same song for the fifth time.

Finally even the orchestra left as the audience grew more and more restless and indignant comments filled the room.

At last one of the member's of the audience walked up on the stage and pulled back the curtain revealing a boldly lettered sign.

"Performance postponed on account of sickness and stage fright. Watch newspapers and
