

E-Week

Engineers Arrive at Final Phase In Planning Open House, Banquet

Students of the College of Engineering and Architecture are in the home stretch in their plans for E-Week April 23 and 24.

The schedule includes an open house Thursday from 2 to 10 p.m. in the Engineering Buildings and the faculty parking lots. Engineer's convocation, 11 a.m. Friday, field day and picnic and the banquet and dance at the Lincoln Hotel, 6:30 p.m.

Competition Divided

Competition between the departments of the college is divided into six phases: window displays, open house displays, E-Week banquet ticket sales, E-Ribbon sales, field day and Blue Print sales.

Window displays and open house displays will be judged by Lincoln business and professional men.

Results of the other four phases are obtained at the end of the selling campaigns and the total points won in field day.

Window displays will be judged for drawing power, ingenuity, clarity and attractiveness.

Open House

Open house displays will be rated on initiative and ingenuity, clarity and simplicity, attractiveness, conformity to curriculum and effectiveness of presentation.

Displays which have been originally constructed for this year's event will be marked with a white ribbon.

Sales events will be judged both on quantity sold and a per capita basis.

Harold Zipp will be the featured speaker at the Friday morning convocation.

Nebraska Grad

A 1930 University of Nebraska grad, he has been assistant to the senior vice president at Boeing Aircraft

Co. in Seattle since 1956. Prior to this he was an Executive Engineer at the Boeing plant in Wichita, Kan.

Highlighting the banquet Friday evening will be the presentation of awards. These will include the Sigma Tau freshman medal, Blue-Print awards, the O. J. Ferguson award, the Hajilton award, the field day plaque, open house plaque and E-Week overall plaque.

Miss E-Week will also be presented at the banquet.

Bill Albers Combo will play for dance beginning at 9 p.m.

Over-all co-chairmen for E-Week are Wayne Lorenz and John Kinner.

—Mexican Influence—

Female Indian Remains May Spot Ancient Center

Dr. Preston Holder, associate professor of anthropology and curator of anthropology at the University State Museum, believes that remains of an Indian girl buried in Illinois a thousand years ago may have led to the location of the center of Mexican influence in the Mississippi Valley.

Notches filed in the teeth of the girl have traits of ancient Mexican cultures, although Dr. Holder reports that the former teeth seem "weak and hesitant" by comparison.

Notches

From one to four notches were filed on the biting surfaces of the upper front teeth and sometimes of the horizontal grooves on the surfaces of the same teeth.

Dr. T. D. Stewart of the Smithsonian Institution determined that the dental operations were performed in several stages during adolescence.

Teeth

Scattered teeth have been found throughout the Cahokia mounds area, where the girl's remains were uncovered by a tractor, but Dr. Holder reported that these teeth were especially significant because the remains included a relatively complete skeleton in the original burial site.

Dr. Holder speculated that the filings might have been a sign of the Indian girl's social class. The minute she smiled, he observed, her social standing would have been obvious.

His work with the Indian skeleton was reported in the Journal of the Washington Academy of Sciences recently.

Book Cites Uni Botany Researchers

"Fifty Years of Botany," a book recently published by the McGraw-Hill Co. in honor of the 50th birthday of the Botanical Society of America, emphasized the prominent role that the University of Nebraska has played in the development of botany in the United States.

The book recognized six prominent researchers who either served on the University faculty or received their training at the University.

Among those recognized was the late Dr. C. E. Bessey, professor of botany and acting chancellor of the University. Dr. Bessey was one of the 25 charter members of the Society and the organization's second president.

Five Nebraska graduates are among the 50 outstanding botanists whom the book recognizes with a brief citation and portrait of each.

The Nebraskans cited in the book are Dr. John Weaver, professor emeritus of the University, who received his B.S. in 1909 and his M.S. in 1911; Dr. Ernest Bessey, son of C. E. Bessey, who received his B.S. degree from the University in 1897.

Others include Dr. Paul Sears, who received a Master of Arts degree from the University in 1957; Dr. Homer Shantz, who received his Doctor of Philosophy degree in 1955 from the University and Dr. George Beadle, Nobel Prize winner who received his B.S. in 1926 and his M.S. in 1927 from the University.

Dr. Hill Speaks On Insect Loss

Dr. Roscoe Hill, chairman of the entomology department, spoke on insect losses before a North Central Branch of the Entomological Society of America meeting held in Columbus, O.

Dr. Hill, branch chairman, spoke of the need for new methods and procedures of determining losses caused by insects in crops and livestock.

Kenneth Pruess, assistant entomologist stationed at the University's North Platte Experiment Station, presented a report on the egg laying response of the army cutworm.

'Alumnus' To Report On Profs

Insert Studies Importance

This month's issue of the "Nebraska Alumnus" will contain 16 page insert dealing with the college professor and his importance to society.

The special report is entitled "The College Teacher, 1959." It is written through the eyes of a typical professor, portrayed by Dr. Loren Eiseley, a 1933 graduate of the University, now professor of anthropology at the University of Pennsylvania.

Problems

The report, which is being published by 249 colleges, universities and private secondary schools throughout the United States and Canada shows the problems and rewards of those who teach in higher education.

It demonstrates that it is actually the college teacher himself who underwrites the cost of higher education through a low income far out of proportion to current living costs.

The April issue of the "Alumnus" will also contain a report on "The Nebraska Teacher: His Problems, Rewards." Sally Adams, "Alumnus" editor prepared the feature concerning University faculty members.

The national survey was prepared by 19 alumni magazine editors from all types of education institutions.

Its sponsor was the American Alumni Council, an international organization devoted to increasing alumni support of higher education.

A similar project undertaken by a group of these editors won immediate acclaim last year. It was a 32-page report entitled "American Higher Education, 1958." The "Nebraska Alumnus" was one of the 153 magazines which published it.

Bedell Selected

Robert Bedell, assistant professor of theory and composition, has been selected by the Ford Foundation to be one of the composers to participate in the Panorama of Opera sponsored by the New York Opera Association in April.

Cancer Cases Show Increase

There has been a sharp increase in the number of admission requests from cancer patients in the last 10 years, according to Duane Johnson, administrator for the University Hospital.

Johnson said that the factors contributing to the increase are finer diagnostic techniques, increasing number of aged people and the incidence of cancer in the older group.

Johnson said that an additional 50 beds would be necessary if the hospital were to accept all the cancer applications.

Uni Loans Given By Scottish Rite

The Scottish Rite Educational Welfare Association has made $40,000 available for student loans through the University of Nebraska Foundation.

The funds will go to junior and seniors on basis of need. The funds will be handled through regular NU channels, according to Joe Seacrest of Lincoln, sovereign grand inspector general for Nebraska.

Two University of Nebraska graduates are among the 15 Midwestern newsmen named by the American Political Science Assn. to receive its annual awards for reporting public affairs.

Neale Copple, former city editor of the Lincoln Journal and part-time Journalism instructor, and Leo Scherer Jr., Journal city hall reporter, have been invited to a two-week seminar on public affairs reporting at the University of Illinois, beginning May 24.

This is the third consecutive year that Journalism School graduates and Journal men have won this award. Past winners are Jack Hart, editorial page editor, and Frank Rall, state house reporter.

Copple's entry was based on an education series, dealing primarily with a University disagreement over teacher training.

Scherer's entry consisted of articles on Lincoln's 1957-58 City Budget, $16.6 million improvement program and city hall features.

ACE Meets Today

ACE will meet today at 5 p.m. in Rm. 200 Teachers College.

The program will concern "Highlights of the ACEI Conference."
