University of Tennessee and Stephen F. Austin College in Texas.

Assistant Director
He was assistant director of theatre at Mississippi for six years.

When asked to compare University Theater productions to Broadway productions Baldwin stated that he liked to let a play "speak for itself."

According to Baldwin, they try to retain all the good parts of the Broadway version but that many changes are needed because of set design, etc.

Like Symphony
Baldwin drew an analogy between a play and a symphony. He said that a symphony would be nearly the same no matter where it was performed because the orchestra all had the same instruments.

Rehearsals for the Eugene O'Neil play started March 26. They are held every evening for about three hours, according to Baldwin.

There are several stages of rehearsal, Baldwin said. "We are about at the point now where things are beginning to jell" he commented.

Rehearsals
For the first two or three rehearsals, Baldwin said, we read over the play and talked about characters. Then there is about a week of blocking. After that we have alternating rehearsals. One night we run through the whole thing and the next night only one act or scene is called.

First Show
"Ah Wilderness" is Baldwin's first major show at the University.

The scenery which consists of three sets, a living room dining room combination, a barroom, and a beach scene, is almost finished, Baldwin said.

As far as competition with the Lincoln Centennial which runs May 2-9, Baldwin stated that it was "anybody's guess whether it would help or hurt."
