

Your University—What It Has to Offer

Health Center Provides Clinic, Hospital

A Student Health Center, housing both a clinic and a hospital, is one of the newest additions to the University of Nebraska campus. Several thousand patients have visited the Center since its opening last fall.

The hospital rooms themselves are the most striking feature of the fully air-conditioned Center. Sixteen two-bed rooms represent an increase of four over the old Center.

Each room is equipped with its own fresh air intake and temperature control, a stainless steel wash basin, showers, some of which are shared between rooms, and beds which have two-way speakers for communication with the nurse on duty.

Sliding walls divide each of several spacious consultation and examining rooms. A dining room for special diet students unable to take their meals in the dorms or houses is included in the new Center.

Students needing attention after hours can use the night entrance on the east side of the building.

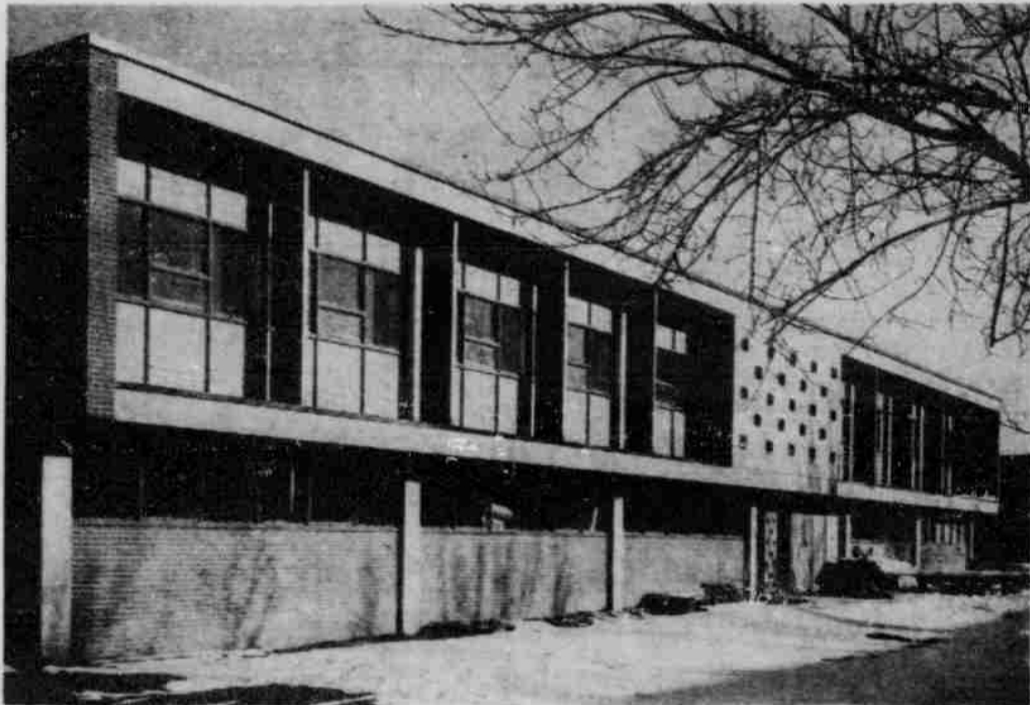

Instead of sign posts indicating where to go, the new Clinic boasts colored directional lines inlaid in the floor to direct students to various divisions.

Dr. Samuel Fuenning, director of the Center, points out that the Center is working to gear its health program to keeping the student ambulatory. The out-patient department is set up to diagnose ailments early, thus halting the majority of diseases in their infant stages, he said.

All students registered for three or more hours during the summer session are entitled to the Student Health Services at the new Center at 15th and U St.

School Honors 60

All but three of the 60 students who received honor degrees last Saturday, 12 with "high distinction" and 48 with "distinction", were Nebraskans. Two were Iowans and one was from Idaho.

The new Student Health Center is located at 15th and U.
