Producer Carl Foreman ("The Key"), quoted in a recent issue of the Film Daily, gave warning to the industry in which he makes his living. "The future of the movies," he said, "rests on who's going to be making pictures five or ten years from now." Foreman stated that film companies "should go out looking for people and bring them in," because very soon "new blood" in production ranks will be a dire need. He sighted England's proposed move to levy theatre tax revenue for the establishment of a school to develop producers, directors and writers. As to a plan for American filmmakers, Foreman has made an early start by attempting the selection of a young writer to observe production of his forthcoming film, "The Guns Of Navarone," which will roll in Europe in January. The writer will be salaried and will assume no other responsibilities during the making of the picture other than an absorption of the essentials of motion picture production.

Allied Artists, a studio who's recent move to major productions has fostered such rewarding efforts at "Friendly Persuasion," "Love In The Afternoon," "Al Capone" and "The Big Circus," has already encouraged at least two prospective young Cecile DeMilles and Sam Goldwyns. They are Denis and Terry Saunders. The brothers, at ages 30 and 27 respectively, are graduates of U.C.L.A.'s Drama Department, and have just produced "Crime And Punishment, U.S.A."

An updated version of the Dostoevski classic of crime and conscience, it is the handiwork of two men of achievement in pictures which far exceeds their years. The Saunders two-reeler, "Time Out Of War," a black and white dramatic story played against a Civil War backdrop, won an Oscar in 1954 and later reaped prizes in film competitions at Venice, London and Edinburgh. Two of their earlier offerings "Introduction To Jazz" and "Narcotics" (1952) have also been the subjects of international acclaim.

Beckmann Takes Leave

Dr. Milton W. Beckmann, professor of secondary education at the University of Nebraska, will serve as head of the secondary school mathematics section in the administration of Title 3 of the National Defense Education Act.

His leave of absence for one year, effective Sept. 1, was Dr. Beckmann approved last week by the University's Board of Regents. Title 3, provides $75 million a year for four years for strengthening mathematics, science and modern foreign language instruction.

Dr. Beckmann will be headquartered in Washington, D.C. in the U.S. Office of Education.

Crowe Heads Turkey Staff

Dr. Lawrence K. Crowe, associate chief of staff of the University of Nebraska field staff in Turkey, was elevated Thursday afternoon to chief of staff, replacing Dr. Otto Hoiberg who has completed his two-year assignment as head of the mission.

His promotion was approved by the University's Board of Regents.

Dr. Hoiberg, who is on leave from the University faculty as co-ordinator of Community Services for the Extension Division, will return to Nebraska in September.

The University Mission in

Dr. Crowe Dr. Hoiberg
 Turkey is financed by a contract with the U.S. International Cooperation Administration. The University is providing technical advice and assistance to Turkey in building its new Ataturk University and in strengthening Ankara University.

 At present the Mission is staffed by nine faculty members, of whom Dr. Hoiberg and Dr. Carl J. Schneider, associate professor of political science, will return in September after completing two-year assignments.

Budget Permits Increases In Salaries of Faculty

As a result of increased legislative appropriations, the University of Nebraska's general current funds budget for the 1959-60 fiscal year will total $16,066,129—an increase of nearly $1.8 million compared with the past fiscal year.

Comptroller Joseph Soshnik said that more than 90 per cent of the increase will go into higher salaries for University personnel. Of the increase, 75 per cent will go into academic salaries, 19 per cent into classified, hourly, and graduate assistant salaries, and 6 per cent into executive salaries, including deans, directors, and superintendents.

These increases, he added, are determined on a merit enue.

basis and not on an across-the-board scale.

The budget was approved Thursday afternoon by the Board of Regents at its regular meeting.

Dr. Soshnik said the general current funds budget, with an actual increase of $1,797,871, consists of: academic and administrative salaries, $8,906,401, up $1,322,155; classified salaries and hourly wages, $3,500,386, up $191,827; graduate assistants, $519,320, up $106,260; and operating expense and equipment, including social security, $3,140,022, up $177,629.

The general current funds budget will be supported by six different sources of revenue.
