A pair of small table lamps recently were found missing from one of the second floor lounges. Three such sets have disappeared in the last year.

Pennsylvanian Wins Playwriting Contest

... Masquers, Theatre Sponsored

"Rockspring," a drama by R. G. Vliet of Meadville, Pa., has been declared winner of the national playwriting contest sponsored by Nebraska Masquers and University Theatre.

Vliet's play will earn its author the Fred Ballard Memorial Prize of $200 to be awarded on the opening night of its production in the Theatre, Feb. 25.

Will Hear Play

The award-winning playwright will also receive $100 toward travel expenses, and will come to Lincoln in October to spend a week hearing the play read by University actors, and conferring with the director and designer of the production.

Sixty-three plays, coming from 19 states, were entered in the competition, making it truly national in character, according to Dr. Joseph Baldwin, acting theatre director.

Because of the number of scripts submitted, the contest was judged in two stages, a semi-final and a final round. Besides "Rockspring," there were five other divisional first place plays, which are being awarded honorable mention in the contest.

Honorable Mention

Honorable mention plays are: "To Hang is to Dangle," by John Leckel, Urbana, Ill.; "Unfinished Portrait," by Madeline Davidson, New York City; "The House Shall Tremble," by Richard Stockton, Iowa City, Ia.; "The Trojan Women," by David Madden, Boone, N.C.; and "Goliath," by J. G. Severns, Iowa City.

Judges for the contest were teachers of drama and creative writing. They were:

Roger M. Busfield Jr., department of speech, Michigan State University.

Sylvan Karchmer, department of English, University of Oregon.

Wayne S. Knutson, director of theatre, State University of South Dakota.

William R. Morgan, department of speech and dramatic art, University of Nebraska.

First Downs Will Be Out Before Long

Downs? Down where? No place, if students will act wisely and immediately, according to L. F. Fowles, assistant dean of student affairs.

"Scolastic reports" or "downs" will be due in his office Monday, and he says students will begin to receive them" a week or 10 days later.

Fowles advises students receiving the negative reports to see their instructors immediately and then go to their advisers.

Three different types of downs are given—an incomplete, an unsatisfactory for grades of two and three and an F for wholly unsatisfactory work.

According to Fowles, the un-satisfactory are "quite redeemable," and students who receive them "should not give up hopes for a passing grade for the semester."

Even the F downs do not mean a failing grade for the semester if the student obtains help and works harder immediately, Fowles said.

Parents, advisers and organized houses or dormitories will also receive notification of the downs, Fowles added. The Office of Student Affairs does not put restrictions on the individuals, but leaves them up to the organized houses.
