

Grad Schools Hurt—Weaver

... Federal Program Blamed

Many respected graduate schools and universities are in a fight as urgent as that for survival itself.

Dr. John Weaver, dean of the University's graduate college, made this comment, putting the blame on the millions of dollars for research given by the federal government through universities for projects by selected scholars.

Dean Weaver

The institution is in a position to acquire.

Dean Weaver said an institution with a distinguished faculty invites more federal support, and is in a position to further expand its facilities and opportunities. As the university grows, it needs a larger staff and draws the best teachers away from the smaller and less adequately financed institutions.

Top People

He said the small schools, not having the resources to hold their top people in this competition, lose academic strength and the ability to attract federal grants also declines.

As a solution, Dr. Weaver suggested a substantial and continuing block grant from the federal government in bolstering of staff, the extension of library and equipment facilities and even the improvement of space.

"The time has come when such federal subsidy is needed across a broader spectrum of basic academic activity," he concluded.

Indian Students Celebrate Dussuhra-Divali Festival

Some 200 persons attended a Dussuhra-Divali festival in the College Activities gym on the Ag campus Saturday night.

The festival was celebrated by 40 foreign students from India to commemorate two separate festivals that take place in their native country at this time. Both of them symbolize the victory of the good or the evil, and usually take place for 10 days, a month apart.

The festival consisted of various native songs and dances by the students in colorful costumes and two documentary films on life in India. The highlight of the evening was a talk on foreign-American relations by Chief Justice of the Nebraska Supreme Court, Robert Simmons.

Judge Simmons asked that the people of America understand foreign students on campus—understand not the future, but their past. He said if this would be done, people in America would be able to understand why they do things the way they do.

He said that if we are to do our part to unify the world we must understand the customs of our foreign friends for our own sake, not for theirs. He said they ask only for our patience and understanding and that they are our equals. "If we do this," he said, "they can give us much."

The celebration was ended with the singing of both the Indian and American national anthems.

Afterward the students served their guests two of their native dishes—samosa, a fried vegetable pop-over, and rava laddu, a sweet nut and coconut candy.

Little Opinion On Early Start

Student support for the Student Council's stand for an "early" opening date in 1961 is yet forthcoming, the Council learned last week.

Dennis Nelson said that he had received letters from RAM, AWS and the Inter Co-op Council in support of the Council's stand for selection of the "early" opening date of the 1960-61 term.

"We haven't enough evidence to present to the Senate calendar committee and if we receive no more, we will just have to view that (favoring of the late date) as the majority opinion of the students," he said.

Betting

"Since the federal agency officials and their advisory committees are, when making their grants, betting in large measure on the established competence of a man," he said, "the more distinguished and well-known a scholar is the more chance he has of receiving support."

He contended the larger the number of such outstanding men a given university has, the larger the total support
