

Jobs of Campus Police Have Lots of Variety

... Issue Permits, Tickets and Guard

Handing out yellow tickets marked "you have violated University of Nebraska parking regulations" is only one of the many duties of the campus policemen.

"We handle all police matters as far as possible on campus," Capt. Eugene Masters, head of the campus force, said. "In emergencies the city police help us out. If necessary, we have authority off-campus too."

Some of the duties include issuing parking permits, checking to see that traffic signs are up, working at rallies and football games and furnishing men for parking and traffic direction for any University function.

"The police also check for fires and for unauthorized persons in buildings," Masters added.

The campus police cruiser car traveled 2,747 miles in October.

"We found 111 doors open after hours on the city and Ag campuses, 29 windows open in buildings, 238 lights on in buildings and 63 lights out around the campus when they should have been on last month," Masters explained.

Campus police officers are commissioned by the city police. Fourteen men make up the force, including two watchmen and one patrolman on duty at Ag campus at night, and one man on duty there during the day.

"Five men, including two watchmen and three men in cruisers are on guard at the city campus at night," Masters said. "Two patrolmen and myself are here in the daytime."

A relief man takes over on either campus when the regular officers have their nights off.

Ag Judges Win Honors At Exposition

The University's meat judging team placed first in judging lamb carcasses in a contest held in conjunction with the International Live Stock Exposition in Chicago last week.

Eli Thomssen, a member of the team, placed third in lamb carcass judging. In overall competition the team placed 17th.

Members of the team were Jim Ray and Keith Smith. Jerry Meyer served as alternate.

Ernest Thayer, member of the livestock judging team, placed fourth in sheep classes at the Exposition.

As a team the Nebraskans ranked sixth in sheep judging. In overall competition they ranked 21st.

Team members include Gerald Gould, Ted Klug, George O'Neal, Donn Simonson, Thayer Wright and Patrick Wright.

R. B. Warren, assistant professor of animal husbandry, is team coach.

University Looks Into IVS Setup

The University is considering the possibility of forming an International Voluntary Service development team for work in the Far East.

The International Voluntary Service, IVS, is a non-profit, church-related organization. Its purpose is to promote "people-to-people" cooperation between rural America and the underdeveloped world.

A team is composed of from six to 20 young men with farming backgrounds and a degree in some agricultural field.

Team members are sent abroad under a two-year contract which provides all necessary expenses, an annual 30-day vacation and a salary.

A request for 11 new teams for the country of Laos has recently been made by the Department of State.

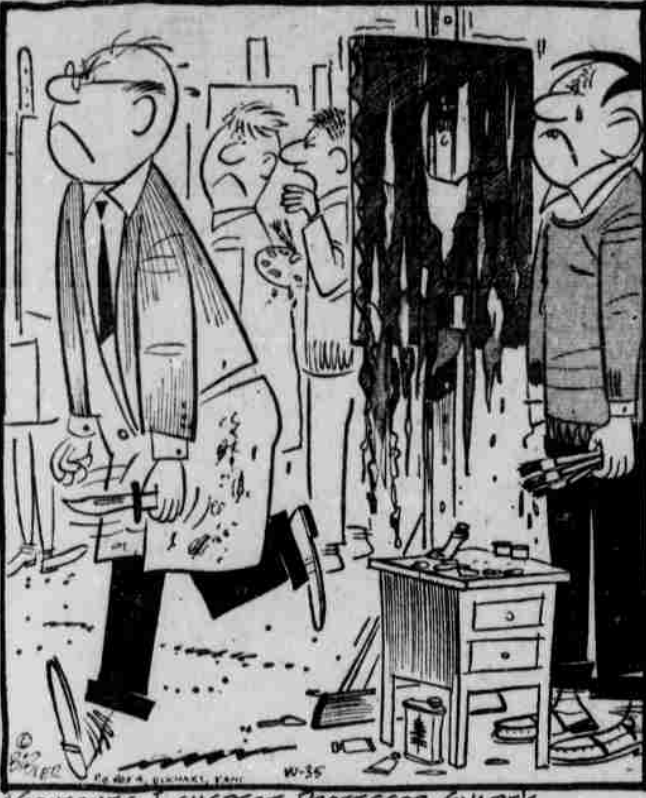

Civil Service Opens Positions

The U.S. Civil Service Commission recently announced positions open with the Department of the Air Force, Federal agencies, the Department of Agriculture and the National Park Service.

The Air Force Department needs internal auditors and contract auditors and the Federal agencies are in need of research psychologists. National Park Service and the Department of Agriculture report positions open for student trainees.

Further information and application forms may be obtained from Gerald Vallery, Civil Service Examiner in charge, located at the U.S. Post Office in Lincoln.

NU Health Center Provides Training Aids for Students

Student Health not only serves the students and staff of the University but also provides a phase of the Lincoln General Hospital nursing school training program.

According to Dr. Samuel Fuenning, director of Student Health, student nurses from Lincoln General receive their out-patient training at the Health Center.

The program was inaugurated in September of 1958 at the request of the hospital. Directors of the hospital's nursing educational program felt training in clinic work and public health nursing would be a valuable addition to the nursing course.

They said they have the chance to work more closely with the doctors and feel they learn many small important things which are necessarily omitted in large hospital training.

They agreed their clinic work had helped them gain a better idea of the importance of understanding people's feelings in regard to health. Miss Hill and Miss Eppler commented that the month of work in the Health Center was one which all the student nurses looked forward to.

Miss Judy Hill and Lou Ann Eppler, student nurses now at the Health Center, said they

Art Professor, Student Honored

Gail H. Butt Jr., associate professor of art, and Larry Johnson, an art student, have been honored by the St. Louis City Art Museum with awards for their oil and water colors.

Prof. Butt won first place in the over-all purchase awards competition and Johnson won the Holloway Memorial Purchase prize.

This is the sixth such award for Prof. Butt. His winning oil painting is titled "Garden for Gilgamesh." Johnson was honored for a landscape water color. Both paintings are now on exhibit at the St. Louis Museum.
