Vice President Rejects Standing Pat on Ike's Record in Campaign

By Herb Probasco "I completely reject a policy of standing pat on the record," Vice President Richard Nixon told reporters at a news conference Monday in Lincoln.

"New programs are needed to meet new problems," declared. Some 30 newsmen were in attendance at the press conference which lasted half an hour.

about Nixon which was released last summer. Both men traveled with the Vice President on the plane which flew non-stop from Washington.

be broken. The program is obsolete. If Congress fails to pass a bill within the broad guidelines laid down by the President, the two candidates for the Presidency should present new programs which could be thoroughly debated, thereby, receiving the mandate of the people.

Missile Lag—A deterrent lag would concern me. In order to determine whether the United States has an adequate defense we must add up the total strength. The country has the power to render a devastating blow.

'Farmer Deserves Share Of Increasing Prosperity'

Vice President Richard Nixon warned Monday night, "It is high time that they (the Democratic leadership) quit treating the farmer as an issue and recognize him as a person who is not getting his fair share of America's increasing prosperity."

NICE TO MEET YOU—says presidential candidate Richard Nixon to coed Ann Schaffer. Her reply, "How do you do, Mr. President-to-be" brought a broad smile and a quick "Thank you". Many University students braved large crowds to attend the Vice-President's reception at the Cornhusker Hotel Monday afternoon.

Setting forth "the rules I believe we should follow in this campaign," the Vice President discussed in length solutions to the farm problem. Up and Down "The only point on which there is unanimous agreement is that we cannot continue to tolerate programs under which the surpluses of basic farm commodities continue to pile up and the prices the farmer receives continue to go down."

Major Issue He declared that one of the major issues in the campaign will be, "What policy should the United States adopt to meet the challenge of Communist economic competition?"

flation is a cheap price to pay for an expanding economic system. "The way to greater economic growth in peacetime," the Vice President continued, "is not through increasing the size of government but by expanding the opportunities for creative enterprise by millions of individual Americans."

Survival—A single issue that applies to all the people. The question is which of the candidates and which of the parties can best provide the leadership in foreign policy and military policy and best meet the challenge presented by the Soviet Empire.

Defense Spending—I feel the present level of defense spending is adequate. If it is necessary to raise it, the people must be prepared. Any increase must not be financed by deficit spending but by an increase in taxes.

Summit Meetings—I believe that the next decade will see a continuation of meetings at the summit, particularly necessary in dealing with Khrushchev and the kind of government he represents.

Use Hatchets He noted that the Democrats "are having their differences now. But they have demonstrated a remarkable ability in the past to resolve their differences and to use the same hatchets on us in the final campaign that they tried out on each other in the primaries."

Federal Aid to Education—I believe federal aid to education is proper under these circumstances: for construction of the elementary and secondary level in public schools; as far as on the university level.

Seaton Lists 3 Issues Most Important in '60

Secretary of the Interior Fred A. Seaton Monday listed the continuation of peace, prosperity and a sane fiscal policy as the issues he considered most important in the coming national elections.

"I can't get around the fact that political participation of some kind has a fascination for me," he noted.

He added that he knew of no cleavage between Nixon and Secretary of Agriculture Ezra Taft Benson.

Concerning his decision to remain in the cabinet rather than run for governor of Nebraska, Seaton said he felt that he had a moral commitment to stay and help the President.

Reject Theory "We reject completely the theories of some of our political opponents that the way to insure a high rate of growth is through more planning and control by government, increased government spending, pegging interest rates at artificially low prices and allowing uncontrolled bank credit," he commented.

Those who favor these procedures admit that they would be inflationary but they contend that a little inflation is a cheap price to pay for an expanding economic system. "The way to greater economic growth in peacetime," the Vice President continued, "is not through increasing the size of government but by expanding the opportunities for creative enterprise by millions of individual Americans."
