'Lawyers Must Work For Laws, Reforms'

... Legal Fraternity Hears Warden Siegler

Too few wardens in the nation's correctional institutions know what they are supposed to accomplish, Maurice Siegler, warden of the Nebraska state penitentiary, told a luncheon meeting of Phi Delta Phi legal fraternity Monday.

And too few lawyers and judges know what prisons are for, Siegler said.

"It is up to the legal profession to help penologists with this problem," Siegler said, "by informing themselves about the prisons and then working for laws and reforms."

Siegler said the purpose of a prison was twofold: "There must be incarceration to protect society from these men and there must be rehabilitation to prepare these men for their return to society."

Some of the problems faced by the Nebraska penitentiary, according to Siegler, are:

—Work—prisoners must be kept busy but the average work time for each prisoner at the Nebraska institution is 5 hours.

—Liesure time—many men become criminals because they do not know how to use their liesure time. Since the average age of a Nebraska prisoner is 26, sports provide an outlet, but men are encouraged to read and learn to enjoy other intellectual activities.

A discussion group will define the role of the AWS in the students life.

The keynote speech will be given by Helen Syder, Dean of Women.

Representatives of the AWS board will form a panel to answer questions that any student may have about AWS.

Janet Hansen is chairman of the program.

—Education—most of the prisoners have less than an 8th grade education, but the average intelligence of inmates is about that of non-criminals.

—Guidance—most prisoners have had little spiritual or technical guidance. As a result, their lives lack purpose and direction.

—Personnel—Because salaries are low, prison guards necessarily come from low income groups and few have any experience in dealing with prisoners.
