Zeroing in on the future

At Gen Tel, our aim is to develop the supercommunications system that will be needed to meet the demands of tomorrow. And we're constantly shooting new ideas at this target.

In our 24 research laboratories, more than 3500 scientists and engineers have their sights set on entirely new concepts in order to achieve these results.

Example: a task force of General Telephone & Electronics scientists, working in the unexplored areas of electroluminescence and photoconductivity, have developed an operating model of a switching device with no moving parts, that may revolutionize telephone communications. It is a thin wafer only 3 inches square that may someday connect and disconnect up to 10,000 telephone lines.

Meanwhile, this new discovery holds promise of having numerous applications in other fields, including switching and read-out devices for electronic computers.

Research is but one of the many areas in which General Telephone & Electronics is thinking and working ahead—not only to meet today's communications needs, but tomorrow's as well.
