

'Sane' Meals Replaced by Amino Acid Research Diets for Twelve Students

By Nancy Whitford
We ate our last "sane" meal at Sunday dinner eight days ago.

The cook had prepared delicious servings of fried chicken and mashed potatoes; broccoli with cheese sauce; molded salad; home-made rolls; vanilla ice cream with chocolate syrup.

Since then, what had begun as an amino acid research for 12 hesitant students, has turned into an hilarious series of expense paid meals. Atmosphere, in this case Valentine decor and constant verbal free-for-alls, may be the key to making monotonous meals pleasant, believes Dr. Hazel Fox, associate professor of home economics in charge of the experiment.

Party Atmosphere
"The food wouldn't be nearly so easy to eat if it weren't for the party we have at each meal," commented Judy Smith, a junior majoring in English.

"It's fun, fun, fun," quipped Nina Herndon, a senior in chemistry and foods and nutrition.

The diet, which seeks to determine body requirements for certain amino acids, the vital components of protein includes such things as:

Breakfast: a pint of amino acids, a beaker of corn meal, four mineral wafers, apple sauce, butter, jelly, sugar and coffee;
Lunch: a pint of amino acids, a beaker of corn meal,

CORN MEAL, ANYONE?

Participating in the home sponsored amino acid diet, the students pictured above are enjoying their daily rations, including corn-meal served in beakers. A festive touch was added to the Valentine's Day meal, as the participants were allowed red and white mints.

four mineral wafers, apple sauce, butter, jelly, sugar and coffee;
Dinner: a pint of amino acids, a beaker of corn meal, four mineral wafers, a dish of pears, butter, jelly, sugar and coffee and Seven Up.

A touch of variety was added to the menu Tuesday with red and white mints to celebrate the Valentine occasion.

"I've eaten better meals before," observed Doralyn Steiner, a junior in Teachers College. "But this is an ideal way for fun and science to come together," noted Suna Goksu, a graduate student from Turkey who is studying food and nutrition.

In addition to contributing to a knowledge of body needs, Dr. Fox believes the study will determine the availability of amino acids in corn.

"This will enable us to help people who live in areas dependant largely on a cereal rather than a meat protein diet," said Dr. Fox.

Other students participating in the project are Hubert Tolman, graduate student doing research in poultry; Ralph Tolman, sophomore in agricultural journalism; Joan Goings, freshman in English;

Peggy Merica, junior in Business Administration; Nancy Whitford, sophomore in journalism; Gladys Svec, graduate student in food and nutrition and Carolyn Griesse, sophomore in vocational education.

Hovland-Swanson Looks To NU Coed as Leader

Long recognized as a leading fashion store Hovland-Swanson has always realized the importance of the Nebraska coed as a fashion leader.

Hovland's has, for over 20 years, had an active College Board. Starting with just a few representatives the board has now grown to complete coverage with all 14 University sororities, all 4 Wesleyan sororities, and the University Women's Residence Halls represented on their 10 member board.

The Hovland-Swanson Board serves for one school year and in the summer Hovland's maintains a "Back To School Board" which specializes in helping incoming freshmen with their University wardrobe problems.

This board is composed of regular College Board members who stay during the summer and graduating seniors from the Lincoln High Schools.

Monday meetings at 4 p.m. in the Hovland-Swanson tearoom are busy. In addition to the normal College Board activities of taking clothes out to the houses to show and putting on Fashion Shows the Hovland Swanson Board has the important job of keeping the store supplied with information about what the college girl wants to see.

At the same time the board is educated by the store on the latest fashion news so that they in turn can pass this information along to their houses.

The members and their houses are:

Alpha Chi Omega, Katy Griffith; Alpha Gamma Delta, Sharon Hanna; Alpha Omicron Pi, Judi Zadina; Alpha Phi, Marty Davey; Alpha Xi Delta, Rosie Kuhl.

Chi Omega, Becky Schnieder; Delta Delta Delta, Linda Clark; Delta Gamma, Jeanne Garner; Delta Zeta, Barb Hall; Gamma Phi Beta Susie Douglas.

Kappa Alpha Theta, Suzi Haberman; Kappa Delta, Cynde Peterson; Kappa Kappa Gamma, Mary Bartlett; Phi Mu, Judy Steen; Pi Beta Phi, Skip Harris.

Sigma Kappa, Gloria Tietjen; Willard, Charlene Graben; Zeta Tau Alpha, Maureen Frazier; and Women's Residence Halls Gladys Tietjen.
