

A Study Of Shapiro

There is also a delicious quality in the poems. Shapiro tries words with you and has you try them on, so that you smell or taste or see what he only says, as in Christmas Tree.

The quickening effect is one of smelling pine boughs and seeing Christmas trees in the mind; hearing familiar sounds, and calling up their habits. Shapiro puts us in on the feel of these things. He enlivens even the shabby and squares our perspective of it.

There are many lasting qualities in the two books. Both show Shapiro at stages of moods and voice tone and development. The voice of the man, the teacher known by students on the campus, the magazine editor with grey heavy hair and spectacles and loosely, politely clipped speech, set off the voice of the man as poet. Each voice has been considerable in causing and creating its own sphere.

The Author

Roy Scheele is a sophomore in Arts and Sciences from Lincoln, majoring "somewhere in the languages; I'm not sure where yet." An occasional past contributor to the Daily Nebraskan, this is Scheel's first article in the special literary issues. Last summer he won a scholarship to the Rocky Mountain Writers Conference in Boulder, Colo., and in August attended the Bread Loaf Writers Conference in Middlebury, Vermont. Scheel is a part-time reporter at nights for the Lincoln Journal.

'Ubi Sunt' Obesity, Oval and Odd

Where are the mud-patty luscious days of happy-hood?

Where is the simple awareness of that simple life?

Where are the sharp, sweet smells of longer days?

Where is the laughter and the petty strife?

Now we have furs and brand new cars

See our days through eyes of fear and debt

Intently do we drink away the hours

And choke upon the smell of cigarettes.

Obesity, oval and odd
Bongo beat and wiggle belly
Fat man dance a complex silly
Feed the face and gain the flab
Repress those feelings
Be a crab.

Down the slop and add the inches
Foolish man to chase the wenches

The task of eating becomes sublime

Art and pleasure become a crime

Oral fixation expressed complete

When eating is too much a treat.
