

Professional Opportunities Increase in Security Agencies

By Wendy Rogers

Opportunities for professional work in the state employment security agencies are growing rapidly, says Donald Bastermeyer, Nebraska commissioner of labor. Bastermeyer was host to a conference of heads and training supervisors of employment security agencies in 10 midwestern states held at the Nebraska Center for Continuing Education. The purpose of the conference was to plan ways and means of building and carrying out programs for development of staffs comprising the manpower of the state agencies, according to Myer Freyman, chief of staff development and Training of the Bureau of Employment Security in the U.S. Dept. of Labor. The federal bureau cooperated with the state agency in setting up the second conference of its kind in the country.

crimination in job opportunity because of age, race, or physical condition."

Many new college graduates will be needed as professional workers in employment security, a field which is rapidly expanding, noted the Commissioner of Labor.

"Today there are many career positions for those persons trained in the areas of counseling, occupational analysis, labor market analysis, economics, and management."

He added that there are also many opportunities for persons trained to deal with youth, older persons, or the handicapped.

Persons with a liberal arts background may find jobs as interviewers, noted Bastermeyer, "and take advantage of agency staff development programs to specialize and acquire additional professional training."

Programs are currently being developed to up grade present staff by offering expanded training opportunities within the agencies and by sending staff members to college campuses, added Bastermeyer.

Myer Freyman pointed out that a "Brochure on Careers in Employment Security" is available in Bastermeyer's office and should be available on campus.

Ataturk to Graduate First Class In Spring

It was a crisp autumn day in Erzurum, a city of 65,000 people in mountainous north-eastern Turkey, three years ago today when the President of Turkey cut a ribbon stretched across the entrance of Ataturk University.

This was to be a unique type of university—one that would take a more than ordinary interest in the lives and problems of the people inhabiting the region to be served.

Ataturk University at Erzurum, in eastern Turkey near the Russian border, opened its 1961-62 academic year with an enrollment of 500 and is planning to graduate its first class next spring.

The university is fashioned after Land-Grant colleges and state universities in this country.

NU Staff Five professional staff people on the University of Nebraska mission are located at Erzurum and assist with the development of the program.

The entire University operation, financed by the Turkish government and the International Cooperation Administration, is headed by Dr. Marvel Baker. The latest representative of the University to visit Nebraska's outpost in the near east was George Round, director of the public relations at NU.

Round said under circumstances prevailing in Turkey, progress at Ataturk was regarded as satisfactory. The new institution built from the ground up, opened its doors in 1958. It is located in an old girl's school building at Erzurum but a new campus is being constructed and may be occupied sometime next year.

Turkish Profs Some 130 Turkish professors have come to the United States and chiefly to Nebraska under the program for further educational training and studies since the program started. They are now on the staffs at Ankara and Ataturk and at other locations in Turkey.

The original Nebraska work has centered around Ankara University to build an adequate teaching staff for the new Ataturk University. A new Home Economics department, the first in Turkey, is now established at Ankara.

"The Turkish people have a great desire for higher education," Round said. "They realize that education can help to improve the economic status of the country and help develop agriculture and industry."

This University—its problems and goals—will be presented in a national educational TV program sometime next year. It was for this purpose that Round and Lloyd Peterson, extension visual aids specialist at the college of Agriculture, visited Turkey earlier this fall.

Spring Commencement In Pershing Auditorium?

David W. Olive, chairman of the University commencement committee, called upon the Student Council Wednesday to sample student opinion on the location of spring commencement exercises at Pershing Municipal Auditorium.

"Following the favorable and receptive response of visitors, faculty and students to the holding of the August Commencement at Pershing, our committee has requested that the Chancellor approve the new location," said Olive. Olive said that he approached the council in order to obtain a more complete expression of student desires and opinions on the Pershing commencement.

U.S. Satellites On Display In Union

Models of three U.S. space satellites representing three major efforts in space exploration are currently on display in the Student Union lobby.

The models are provided by the National Aeronautics and Space Administration, the agency of the U.S. government directing and coordinating all non-military space programs for the U. S.

The models are of Pioneer I, our solar probe orbiting the sun between the Earth and Venus; Echo I, our first communications satellite; and Tiros I, our first weather satellite.

Pioneer I is reported to be capable of transmissions of up to 50 million miles through its 150 watt radio transmitter. Echo I, which reflected radio broadcasts and telephone conversations between California and New Jersey, is 100 feet high aluminum coated plastic sphere when inflated.

Tiros I, weather satellite, has transmitted more than 20,000 pictures of earth cloud cover to our scientists.
