Yearly Grant Will Create Two Professorships

Two additional professorial chairs have been established at the University through a yearly grant of $7,500 from Mrs. Gertrude Rodgers, formerly of Lincoln.

The professorships will be in memory of her husband, the late Bert Rodgers, a Lincoln insurance executive.

Given through the University Foundation, the grant, in the form of an annual gift of 100 shares of American General Insurance Company, will permit the University to establish two professorships carrying an annual stipend of $3,750 each. The recipients will receive the stipend in addition to their regular salaries.

In the trust agreement, Mrs. Rodgers stipulated that the funds go to professors of recognized excellence in teaching or research, "whose services to the University are of such a high standard as to make their services or retention on the academic staff desirable."

The grant is for a five-year period with the intention of continuing the grant in perpetuity, the trust agreement said.

Chancellor Clifford Hardin called the grant "the type of investment that will insure the continued excellence of the University. It is through such gifts that the University will be able to more adequately recognize distinguished faculty members."

The Rodgers professorships will bring to five the number now in existence. The other three are: Two Howard Wilson Professorships held by Dr. Norman Cromwell, professor of chemistry who is one of the nation's pioneers in anti-cancer drugs, and Dr. John Lonnquist, professor of agronomy who is among the world's ranking plant breeders; and a Charles Mach Professorship, held by Dr. James Miller, Jr., a distinguished authority on the works of Walt Whitman.

The Faculty Senate will be asked to nominate faculty members for the new professorships. Preference will be given to faculty members in the fields of insurance and of sciences related to agriculture.

"Man Into Space" will be featured at 8:30 p.m. Thursday on radio KNUS, 880. It will also be aired in the Student Union.
