

—NSA Executive Committee— Opposition Criticises Strength of Authority

each regional organization of NSA has a separate constitution, which may not conflict with the general constitution, and may enact policies or programs within its region, provided that such policies and programs do not conflict with the general Constitution or those determined by the National Student Congress.

One criticism of the Regional organization concerns its representative voting power on the NEC. Representation on the NEC is determined on the basis of the number of students included in the member student bodies in the region. Each region has one representative, with one added for regions representing more than 40,000 students.

Iowa and Nebraska, with 12 member colleges and universities, form one region.

Ross Aids Writing Of Mexican History

A new, two volume work of Mexican history is now in the writing stage. Dr. Stanley Ross, professor of history, helped eight Mexican scholars research the work for a year at El Colegio de Mexico City.

Ross said it should be "a substantial breakthrough for inter-cultural relations" with other nations and peoples. The work, long needed by Mexican scholars, will be published in English and Spanish. The University of Nebraska Press has already made plans to publish the English translation.

It is written especially for professors and students of Mexican history.

Steve Gage, President of the University Student Council, recently stated that University students "need to ascertain where arguments pro and con on affiliation with NSA are emotional and where they are illogical."

Said Gage, "here is the need for objectivity in any"

for the United Nations will hold its second organizational meeting next Tuesday, to hear a representative of the Association of International Relations Clubs, a nonpolitical national organization which stimulates interest in international problems and promotes personal contact between American and International students living in this country.

There is no apparent conflict between the AIRC and the CCUN national organizations, and they are completely separate. We will consider on Tuesday night the feasibility of joint affiliation.

The CCUN hopes to draw international students into its membership. Lack of knowledge here about the UN is partly caused by the fact that the UN does not have the same contact throughout the United States that it does in many other countries. As Americans, we

The Old Pro

An interesting article appeared in the Creighton University paper over the recent attempt by the Bluejays to reopen the basketball series with the Cornhuskers. The key statement, used by the writer, quoted NU's Tippy Dye in the following manner: "The disadvantage would be in the matter of recruiting."

The sportswriter further makes the statement that Nebraska enters a sports contest so downtrodden that it already has the attitude of losing. In justification of this, he further states that "recruiting" doesn't hang on the winning or losing of basketball games, but the school.

The writer concludes by saying Dye's arguments against this series are only a feeble way of denying that another big-time basketball power exists in Nebraska besides the University.

In reply to this feeble attempt of grabbing for air in a whirlpool, The Old Pro would like to point out a few things that might illuminate the disillusioned.

First of all, the subject of recruiting appears to be the only main point of quip. Creighton has finally obtained a contender in basketball, thanks mainly to Paul Silas. Two years ago, the Bluejays had no idea of bringing up a series with the Huskers because they knew they'd get beat badly and without a doubt, this would hurt their recruiting in the state.

The Creighton writer makes a claim that the Bluejays recruit most of their players from out of state with Nebraska having an instate advantage. In effect, what the writer wants to say and doesn't is that Creighton feels now they might beat the Huskers and thus increase their own prestige in recruiting in the state.

A good percentage of the present Husker ball club will tell you that while in high school and even after being enrolled at Nebraska, Creighton attempted to persuade them to come to their school. This is in direct contrast to what the Creighton sportswriter stated and with the policy of the Creighton coaching staff.

The writer also is lacking in his sports knowledge. Very few teams, particularly on a college level, have a defeatist attitude. Probably, this was the reason that Creighton had to drop bigtime football or if they are a bigtime school, possibly they might rejuvenate it, then worry about taking on Nebraska University in basketball.

I think Creighton ought to feel very fortunate in obtaining the service of Paul Silas so that they once more might become a winning team and have some power to draw basketball material to their school rather than what they presently have as a freshman team. No doubt their coaches will inform this poor soul winning and recruiting go hand in hand.

Prejudice is formed in each school; Creighton and Omaha both have rules about which teams their freshmen squads can play, discriminating against fraternity and independent teams. Nebraska, in this case, also is somewhat prejudiced in holding their present stature in the state and not renewing this Creighton-NU series. I'm sure, however, if Creighton checks the record, the school officials will find that our schedule is presently made out through the next two seasons.

Furthermore, this type of relationship is not only present in the state of Nebraska. Cincinnati and Ohio State, the best two teams in the nation last year, did not meet each other until the finals of the N.C.C.A. and for the last ten years, haven't played each other for similar reasons Nebraska and Creighton officials hold.

One step could be taken in aiding this situation, first the two schools could get together on scheduling a double-header with a big name school from both coasts playing one night in Lincoln, the next in Omaha, and interchanging teams. With this type of cooperation, eventually a series could be revived but not solely to the benefit of the Hilltop school.

Question of the Month: What happened to Nebraska's Big Eight challenger's?

Gymnasts Host Buffs, Air Force

Nebraska gymnasts meet Colorado and the Air Academy Saturday at 2:00 p.m. in the Men's P.E. Building in a double dual, the last home meet of the season for the Huskers.

"Compared to other teams," says Coach Jake Geier, "C.U. is a little weaker than last year, but Glen Wilson, their new coach is building power."

Air Force coach Jim Tanaka, who piloted his team to a 75-37 win over C.U. earlier this year, regularly has about twenty men on his squad says Geier. "That means each man is a specialist on one or two apparatus, while we'll have men who compete in several events each."

Husker gymnasts will see competition in the 30 foot rope climbing event for the first time since last year. Charles Williams of Nebraska holds the All College record of 4.6 seconds. Husker Tom Sitzman did it this week in practice in 4.7.

In comment on the weekend's competition, Geier aid, "The Air Academy is the All College Champion. They beat a real tough Minnesota team, which probably makes them a little better than we are."
