Although the former Wy-oming head man is used to spring squads of 100, he figures he will have enough to work with at Nebraska.

There are 25 returning let-termen and eight of the '61 starters returning. But the Husker staff is already worried about a lack in depth.

Devaney has pointed out that although there are good backs, there aren't enough. The end and center spots, although the roster lists quite a number of prospects, may provide another brow wrinkler for the new staff. And defensive linebackers could prove to be still another problem.

"We certainly are going to try to find more depth," said Devancy, "but we're not sure just where it will come
