

'Natural Look Best' Says Charm Expert

Midwestern girls have a natural look which enhances their charm, according to Mrs. Bess Rothman who addressed coeds Monday night in the student union.

Following her address sponsored by the Junior Panhellenic Council and the Student Union, Mrs. Rothman noted that coeds she'd seen here were "beautifully dressed and groomed . . . their make-up has a natural look, not heavy or artificial."

Fashion-wise, the charm expert from Dallas, Tex., said skirts are dropping—as far as an inch below the knee. She commented that very short skirts, or kilts, often worn by college coeds, are "overdoing it."

"College girls should be more dignified than that," she said.

Defining charm in her address to NU coeds, Mrs. Rothman pointed out that charm is measured by "how much good you bring out in others, how much you make others feel at ease and comfortable. . . The most important part of true charm is what you are inside."

"It's what you do with what you've got that matters," she continued.

Noting that "anytime you go against nature, you suffer for it," Mrs. Rothman illustrated a discussion on posture with personal demonstrations and audience participation.

"I like to stress the cutting out of every unnecessary movement," said the former model and modeling instructor.

"A woman is always modeling—you should do the same in everyday life as you would on the runway."

Natural make-up, fashion to suit the individual and the need for self-confidence are all part of the charm picture, noted Mrs. Rothman.

She commented that "When a woman knows she has made the most of her physical self, then she can start giving to others—that's true charm."
