

Prof. Hurlbut Will Attend Paris Meet

Prof. Lloyd Hurlbut will represent the United States at an international conference in Paris, France, next week.

Prof. Hurlbut, chairman of the University department of agricultural engineering, will leave by plane Saturday to attend a meeting of a technical advisory group. The group will prepare recommendations concerning standard codes for official testing of agricultural tractors and machines involved in international trade.

His trip is sponsored by the Organization for Economic Cooperation and Development (OECD), which is located in Paris. The advisory group is part of an International Committee for OECD composed of testing authorities representing 22 countries.

On Monday, Hurlbut will meet with members of the U.S. mission to OECD for briefing prior to sitting in on the group meetings Tuesday and Wednesday.

He will return to the United States in time to attend the national convention of the American Society of Agricultural Engineers (ASAE) at Chicago, Ill. Hurlbut is past president of the ASAE.

MORTAR BOARD SPEAKER—Vice-Chancellor Roy Holly spoke to about 50 University women (and seemed to enjoy it) Wednesday evening at the Mortar Board sponsored graduate seminar. Holly told the women that graduate study was rapidly expanding in college fields. (Phot by Pixie Smallwood)

Vice Chancellor Holly Addresses NU Women At Graduate Seminar

Some 50 University women at the Mortar Board-sponsored Graduate Seminar heard Vice-Chancellor Roy Holly say that "Graduate College is one of the most rapidly expanding areas in college education today."

The Vice-Chancellor for Graduate and Professional Education and Research and the Dean of the Graduate College spoke Wednesday night to an audience composed mainly of junior and senior women. He noted that there is a generally increasing work, and that there are greatly increased activities in this area.

Holly said Federal government statistics show that "to supply business, research and colleges, we should be graduating 25,000 P.H.D.s a year." The amount now being graduated is around 10,000, he noted.

Citing NU Graduate study statistics, Holly noted that the University has "the first Graduate College ever organized in a tax-supported institution."

Graduate instruction in the University began in 1886. In 1895 a Graduate School was organized with a designated faculty under the direction of a dean.

By an amendment to the charter of the University in 1909, the Graduate School became a Graduate College.

Holly also noted that the first P.H.D. granted here was in Sanskrit.

There are some 60 departments at the University which offer work leading to a Masters degree, and 35 which offer work leading to a P.H.D., explained Holly. There are also a number of Masters degrees offered in designated areas, such as Master of Science in Dentistry.

Of some 615 faculty members now teaching at the University, about 250 are members of the Graduate faculty.

There are more than 1,240 graduate students at the Uni-

Fellowship List

Mortar Board representative Mary Weatherspoon announced at the Graduate Seminar that she is compiling a list of fellowships taken from the information sheets sent by various colleges to the Division of Student Affairs and the Graduate Office.

This list of general fellowships and fellowships for women only may be picked up Dec. 19, in the Cornhusker office.

University, and a total of 384 students enrolled in the advanced professional divisions of Teachers College, noted Holly.

Mortar Board representative Mary Weatherspoon introduced Dr. Holly.

Following the opening session four members of the Graduate faculty conducted sessions on different areas within the Graduate College.

They are Dr. Hazel Fox, Acting Director of the School of Home Economics; Dr. A. Stewart Hall, Chairman of the Economics Department; Dr. Walter K. Beggs, Dean of Teachers College; and Dr. Walter Wright, Assistant Dean of the College of Arts and Sciences.

Americans Concerned With Common Market

By BOB RAY
Ag News Editor

Consumers, students, farmers and educators from all over the midwest heard an explanation of the European Common Market yesterday at Nebraska Wesleyan University.

The explanation came from the Common Market's president, Dr. Walter Hallstein, guest law lecturer at Georgetown University, Washington, D.C., and rector of Frankfurt University in his native Germany.

In the first of two speeches, Hallstein said that agricultural surpluses in other western countries have nothing to do with the European Economic Community's (EEC) common agriculture policy.

This attitude was challenged in the later question session by midwesterners who were concerned about U.S. agriculture's future in the face of Common Market competition.

James Albracht, of the Nebraska Wheat Commission, wanted to know if the European Community would still buy 55 million bushels of U.S. wheat each year.

Others wanted to know if a "European comparative advantage" might ruin other U.S. industries. One Wesleyan coed asked about U.S. money migration to Europe. The answer to her question was that U.S. investors have sent five times as much capital to Europe since the Common Market was formed in 1958 as in the four years from 1954 to 1958.

Hallstein's answer to all the other queries about Europe's competition with the U.S. in world agriculture, banking, machinery and fuel trade was the same.

"We will make no promises," he said. "We will not say that our prices will always be in line with yours."

"But," he added, "we can say this: Farm surpluses are the result of the progress in some nations and poverty in others, and the relationship between supply and demand would be no better if there were no Common Market. The two largest economies in the free world should be able to sell to the same needy customers that they sold to when Europe was plural instead of unified."

Hallstein says he feels the EEC can make a major contribution to the future economy of the free world. "We'll convince those who doubt that the free nations can overcome their problems, and prove that our free democratic convictions are not a thing of yesterday, but of today and tomorrow, and the day after."

"Our system, based on freedom, not only works better but is better. This is our contribution of the free world's strength and peace."

Upon receiving an honorary doctorate of law degree from Wesleyan, Hallstein said "Nothing pleases me more than getting an honorary degree."
