

Students Begin To Fill Ag Campus Courses

Short Courses at the Nebraska Center and Ag campus are filling with students.

Twenty high school graduates have enrolled already for the Jan. 21-Mar. 15 term of the Midwest Institute for Young Adults. Dr. Otto Holberg, director of the project, is looking for 130 more high school graduates who want additional training in business or agriculture.

Recent MIYA graduates have boosted their incomes in jobs back home with skills learned in the courses, said Holberg.

A short course on selection and maintenance of tractors and power units Jan. 28-30 will include ignition, oil and fuel systems, tractor selection and engine condition.

U. E. Wendorf, of the Ag Engineering Department, explained that a short course in farm welding will deal with problems in oxy-acetylene and arc welding, heliarc welding, repair by welding and use of alloy filler rods and electrodes.

In addition to the short courses, more than 300 farmers are expected to enroll in the University electronic records project this year. "In 1962, we concentrated primarily on basic overall farm management accounting and home accounts of family living expenses," said Dean Brown, University Extension economist. "In 1963, we plan to develop enterprise accounting and analysis."

The University's automatic data processing equipment will summarize, analyze and interpret farm business records.

Farmers sign up to send in farm and home records on a monthly basis. They receive quarterly and annual financial summaries of their farm business.

In addition, they receive a 10-month tax-management summary and an annual management analysis of their farm business records.

County Extension agents and vocational agriculture teachers across the state have been attending special workshops on farm and home records. As a result, they are in a position to answer questions about the Record Project in 1962 and plans for 1963.

Dr. Olsen returned this fall from a semester at the El Colegio de Mexico as a visiting professor of American history.
