What About That Crane On Twin Towers Dorm?

By TOM MCGINNIS
Nebraskan Staff Writer

If you are a student of normal curiosity, you're probably wondering how they got the big crane on top of Twin Towers, and how they are going to get it down.

Here's the answer. According to Mickey Landers, construction superintendent for the project, the crane has gone to the top of the towers through a small five by five foot hole cut in each floor of the dormitory. He said that the 28 ton tower for the crane is 65 feet or four stories high.

When they first began using the crane for lifting materials, its base was in the basement, and as construction progressed the crane was lifted two stories at a time by hydraulic jacks, said Landers.

Emeriti Members Elect Officers

Harald G. O. Holck, professor of pharmacology emeritus was recently elected president of the University Emeriti Association. He succeeds James Sellers, professor of history emeritus.

Other newly elected officers are:

Clarence E. McNeill, professor of agronomy emeritus, secretary; and Gilbert H. Sechrist, professor of electrical engineering emeritus, treasurer.

Members of the executive committee are: Nels A. Bengston, professor of geography emeritus; Horace C. Filley, professor of agriculture economics emeritus; and Robert W. Goss, professor of botany emeritus.

He added that each time the crane was lifted the operation only took approximately two hours.

When the crane on the south tower had served its purpose, its tower was let down in sections through the same hole it had come up through. The 60 foot mast, which is the horizontal part on top that does the actual lifting, was let down by another portable crane on the project which has a lift of 125 feet. The crane on the north tower is still being used but will soon be taken down the same way.

According to the construction superintendent the crane could lift an eight thousand pound load. It is powered by four electric motors totaling 55 horsepower. The operator for the crane sits in the wooden cab on top of its tower.

Landers said that construction on the 13 story dormitories has now progressed far enough that they will be able to continue despite cold weather. He added that the weather had certainly been "good to them" until Thursday.

Workers have put up polyethylene films around the outside to keep the temperature inside tolerable. Landers said that the pre-poured concrete slabs go on very easily and

Faculty Concert To Be Thursday

A chamber music recital by University faculty members Thursday at 7:30 p.m. in the Student Union ballroom will feature music by Mozart and Brahms.

The ensemble will play Mozart's "String Quartet in B-Flat Major," Brahms' "Piano Trio in C Minor," and Barber's "String Quartet." Members of the instrumental group are Emanuel Wishnow, professor and chairman of music, and Arnold Schatz, assistant professor, on the violin; and assistant professors Louis Trzcinski, viola, Priscilla Parson, cello; and associate professor Audun Ravnan, piano.

The public is invited and there is no admission charge.

NU Staffers Will Survey In Uganda

Two University staff members will conduct a four-month agricultural survey for Uganda in British East Africa.

Dr. Keith Gregory, regional coordinator of beef cattle breeding research in the 13 north-central states and professor of animal husbandry at the University, will head a five-man survey delegation of agricultural researchers for the U.S. Agency for International Development.

Dr. Philip A. Henderson, professor of agricultural economics and extension farm economist, was given a leave of absence recently by the Board of Regents through Apr. 30 to serve on the team.

Uganda applied to the Agency for an assistance program for developing its agricultural resources, particularly livestock. The survey team will study the country's agricultural potential and make recommendations regarding the feasibility of such a program and how it might be accomplished if it is feasible, he explained.

En route to Uganda and on the return trip, they will visit universities and research laboratories in Sweden, Denmark, France, and the British Isles.

Nearly New Shop Open Wednesday

The Nearly New Shop, 1610 R Street, is now open to students, University employees and faculty members on Wednesday from 7-9 p.m.

ID cards are needed for purchasing items and all proceeds go to the Student Loan Fund.

NU Professor Will Publish Law Textbook

Dr. Norman L. Hill, University science professor, has recently had an international law textbook published and another is scheduled for March publication.

Harper and Row has just released Dr. Hill's "International Politics." Random House will publish his "Mr. Secretary of State" in the spring as one of a series. The research was made possible with the help of a Woods Fellowship grant.

Dr. Hill was honored by the University in 1960 with a distinguished teaching award of $1,000. He is an internationally-known authority in his field of political science and has been a University faculty member since 1927. Several other books written by him are used as texts throughout the country.

In 1959 he was a Fulbright fellow and taught at the University of Wales in addition to serving as a lecturer at the University of Washington. Dr. Hill has also directed the work of many graduate students.
