

Student, Faculty Panel Discusses Implications Of Commie Infiltration

By SUSIE SMITHBERGER
Nebraskan Staff Writer

Three foreign students and a University history professor discussed Communist infiltration yesterday in conjunction with International Student Week sponsored by the Student Union.

"There is no Communism as such in Africa but there are many Communist traits," said Thomas Mills. "The Communism that is there comes as a result of economic conditions of the newly liberated countries," he added.

The countries must turn to either the east or west for aid, said the African student. They turn to the west first but if they are not satisfied they turn to the east. Countries prefer to remain neutral so they can turn to either one for help, noted Mills.

"The governments are based on democracy but there are such things as lack of freedom of speech and the possibility of going to jail without trial that reflect Communism," Mills commented.

President Elected

The president is elected by popular vote but when in power he feels that since he was popularly elected he can do as he pleases, according to Mills.

"The politicians go not with the intention of serving the nation but with the idea of accumulating wealth," he stated.

Tony Rodrigues of Cuba said that many of his countrymen are killed every day fighting Castro's government but the United States doesn't hear about it. This will continue as long as Castro is there, he predicted.

"Cuba, in Castro's point of view, is the only country in this hemisphere in which freedom is practiced," declared Rodrigues. "Castro says that in Cuba everybody is equal. However, some people are more equal than others as it now stands," he added.

Intentions Good

When Castro first came to Cuba, he was merely a social reformer, said the Cuban. He intended to do good things, including making social features more equal.

"Then he nationalized too much. He took away so much land from the large landowners that they could no longer exist."

"As he began nationalizing everything some people began to think he wanted to introduce Communism but the majority of the people had not enough education to recognize this fact and do something about it," noted Rodrigues emphatically.

Those against Castro were imprisoned or exiled, he emphasized. It was impossible to remain neutral, one must be for the government to prevent suspicion of treason.

"Since a year ago, Castro has been losing the support of the people and very few remain behind him anymore. There are now posts in every block or so, a house in charge of reporting anything suspicious to the government. They really keep an eye on conspirators," he declared.

Castro Blames U.S.

In commenting on anti-Americanism in Cuba, Rodrigues said that whenever Castro wants to stir up this feeling he links the United States with the fact that Cuba has been under dictatorship since it became a nation.

"There is some support for this reasoning," said the Cuban. "The U.S. has more or less supported dictatorships in order to keep stable government. One instance was their support of Batista by sending arms at the time of the revolution."

"Napoleon compared China to a sleeping lion that could do something when it wakes up," said James Wong of Hong Kong. "Communism was in there when the lion was waking up."

The country was torn by warlords which the government had to resist so there was no time to deal with Communism, explained Wong.

Then came the Japanese and World War II, and after that the Communists took over the mainland of China.

Follow Russia

"The educated people were concerned with how the country could progress fast and efficiently. They looked to Russia who made rapid progress and thought they could do the same."

"What they failed to realize was that the progress only occurred at the same time as Communism, not as a result of it," he added.

There is no spot in the world that is as concerned with Communism as is Hong Kong, said the citizen of that province. Its future lies completely on how the Communistic trend goes.

"Hong Kong is the junction between Communism and anti-Communism," said Wong. "The two factions get along with each other very well. There are no restrictions keeping them apart."

The government does try to control extreme demonstrations but otherwise freedom is practiced, according to Wong.

"If Hong Kong is to exist as it is, the political institutions around it must remain the same," commented Wong. "If Russia takes over Formosa, Hong Kong will be added to China. If China becomes free, Hong Kong will join it."

Dr. Albin Anderson, University professor in history, said, "There is a great difference between the Marxist and Lenin ideal and the reality of what Communism now is."

"They insisted that Communism would make its appearance first in well developed countries that had already had capitalism and democracy. The only country this has occurred in is Czechoslovakia."

They also predicted that Communism would destroy colonialism and imperialism, said the professor. They thought all people would get together against imperialistic powers and rebel.

Seize Power

Then when the Colonial revolution took place, Communism would see that the seizure of power takes place with Communism in the saddle.

"However, in most cases the countries have released their regimes on their own, without revolt," stated Anderson.

He concluded, "I am not unhappy with the Communist theory about solving problems but I am concerned with what it is doing to the individual. When individual freedom and choice go, life goes."

Da Vinci Inventions On Show

The world's most extensive collection of replica inventions of Leonardo da Vinci will go on display at Morrill Hall March 8 to April 28, according to Dr. C. Bertrand Schultz.

Schultz, director of the University State Museum, said the entire second floor of Morrill Hall will be used to show the collection.

The models are the property of the International Business Machine Corp. They were made from da Vinci's drawings and plans by Dr. Roberto Gutelli, an authority on the life of the painter and inventor.

Among the models which will be exhibited are a steam gun which some authorities believe fired a projectile two miles; a parachute, which da Vinci called a "pyramid-shaped tent of linen," an earth excavating machine and an air conditioning unit that actually saw everyday use in the boudoir of Beatrice d'Este, wife of da Vinci's patron.

A replica of his flying machine which authorities believe was also built and tried out during his lifetime will be displayed in addition to his design of a huge aerial screw run by clock-works which is considered the forerunner of the modern propeller.

The models were originally constructed under Gutelli's supervision for the 1938 exhibition of da Vinci's work in Milan. During WWII they were completely destroyed in Tokyo and Gutelli was confined in a concentration camp.

When he returned to the United States he began work on another set of models including those to be shown at the University.

CANON COLLINS . . . Disarmament Chairman

Disarmament Leader To Make CND Talk

Canon L. John Collins, chairman of Britain's Campaign for Nuclear Disarmament (CND), will speak Friday at 2 p.m., on "Alternative, Red or Dead" in the Union Small Auditorium.

The Lincoln committee for sane nuclear policy is sponsoring Canon Collins' speech.

CND has been instrumental in the molding of Britain's public opinion to outlaw nuclear weapons and achieve disarmament.

Canon Collins is also chairman of the European Federation against Nuclear Arms, an organization that resembles CND, but serves the European international front.

Since 1948 he has been Canon of St. Paul's Cathedral. He is chairman of Christian Action, which he founded after er WWII to help solve problems concerning race relations, war and peace, and refugees.

He initiated a number of outstanding conferences in the past few years including those between pacifists and non-pacifists in England, and the Accra Assembly held in Ghana in June, 1962.

In addition he established the Defense and Aid Fund which has raised over $600,000 for its purpose of safeguarding freedom and human dignity in South Africa.

Canon Collins will be available for informal discussion with students and faculty after his speech.

Suicide Study Lists Degrees Of Danger

A University psychologist, Dr. Warner Schaie, and Drs. James Weiss and Nicholas Nunez, University School of Medicine, have recently completed a research project which leads to a further understanding of suicide attempts.

The men studied 35 patients who were admitted to St. Louis City Hospital for suicidal attempts. According to their research report the significant findings were:

—dangerous medical consequences accompany serious suicidal attempts.

—the attempts of persons over the age of 45, who attributed the act to concern about "mental illness," were most likely to be medically dangerous and psychologically serious.

—attempts of persons under the age of 30, whose methods were that of taking poisons and who attributed their act to the stress of "family trouble," were generally not psychologically or medically serious.

In general it was found that suicidal attempts were most serious if the attempter was over 45, attributed his difficulty to personal "mental illness" and described his attempt as serious, or if he appeared to be clinically psychotic, the report said.

The report also stated: "It appears likely that suicidal attempts will not be serious or successful if the attempter is under 30 years old, if the only method considered has been ingestion of poison, if the patient attributes his difficulty to 'family trouble' and if he is not psychotic, and if his admitted intent is anything other than certain death."

1. My theory on looking for a job is—Play it big! Shoot for the top! Go straight to the press for your interview.

I don't know any presidents.

2. Use your head, man. Have your dad set up appointments with some of the big shot-to-be-laws.

3. Beautiful! All you have to do is find a president who likes dogs. You'll have him eating out of your hand in no time.

I don't know an Eisenhower from an Elk.

4. Finally, I've discovered what should tell you. You've got to practice.

It's not so bad as it seems. My idea is to find out the name of the employment manager at the company I'm interested in. Write him a letter telling him my qualifications. Spell out my interests, needs, desires, etc.

5. A letter to the employment manager? No he he! You've a lot to learn.

Then how come I landed a great job at Equitable—an executive training spot that's interesting, pays a good salary and has a lot of papers for the boss.

6. Finally, I've discovered what should tell you. You've got to practice.
