

Orchids of Congratulation

DELIVER IMMEDIATELY: Orchids of Congratulation to A.W.S., Chi Omega, Gamma Phi Beta, Pi Beta Phi, Alpha Phi and Delta Gamma.

Message on enclosed card: Congratulations on the part you played in presenting a Coed Follies which will be remembered as one of the finest presented by the University.

SATURDAY NIGHT'S production was one which placed entertainment and talent into a package of near-perfection. The auditorium was filled to near capacity, and the audience was unusually receptive during the entire show. Seldom have all of these elements been a part of a Coed Follies presentation.

The Chi Omegas, who utilized the writing, composing, directing and singing talents of Pam Hirshbach were most deserving of their first place trophy. We join many others in the opinion that their skit was presented with professional polish. Also, we would stand in line with the other University students in order to buy a recording of Miss Hirshbach's finale.

TO ALL connected with the show our congratulations on a fine production.

Women's Hours . . .

Time For Consideration

MOST UNIVERSITIES, Nebraska included, subject their coeds to hour restrictions which are completely incongruous with the academic program, which considers coeds mature enough for independent study.

Fortunately, however, many university administrators are now realizing that more liberal regulations can and should be adopted for women students.

THE MICHIGAN DAILY, University of Michigan student newspaper, reported that senior women in sorority houses are already using the key permission system with no hour restrictions. Under the system, the keys are given to all senior women with only one stipulation — that the coeds sign out and return before their residence opens at 7 a.m. the following day.

At the University of Wisconsin, coeds have proposed that all sophomore, junior and senior women with at least a 2.5 overall average be given keys.

AT UCLA, the Office of Housing

Services is polling parents of residents to see whether special restrictions for college women have become outdated. If parents agree, the lockout system may be discontinued.

University of Nebraska coeds have seen many changes in the hour regulations enforced by A. W. S. However, it seems that there is room for improvement. Most senior coeds are of legal age, all senior women have found it impossible to get away from "grade school restrictions." While men are graduated into an independent status, coeds are forced to conform with compulsory closing hours.

IF THE majority opinion is against over-restrictive women's hours, the issue could very easily cause some form of revision. The University has not taken the lead in loosening the hour restrictions, but perhaps A. W. S. and the administration could join with the national move by taking a careful look at the hour revisions being proposed and carried out on other campuses.

You Never Know . . .

(ACP)—Many college professors seem to have an unerring talent for not saying exactly what they intend to say. The Daily Universe, Brigham Young University, therefore offers the following translations:

What the professor says	What the professor means
The textbook for this course will be one you will want to keep all your life.	The book costs $15.95, and they won't be buying it back next semester.
My philosophy of teaching embodies the principles of certain academic discipline.	I'm a bear.
I appreciate your remarks. Unfortunately, we don't have the time to pursue that line of thought.	Quit interrupting my lecture.
Of course, you all know that the honor system is in effect in this classroom.	You'll notice I've passed out alternate tests, and I'll monitor the classroom.
I know you would enjoy delving more deeply into this interesting subject.	You'll be expected to hand in at least two research papers this term.
The final grades will be determined on a rigid curve.	I plan to give one 9 in this class.
It might be well for me to cite one or two concrete examples of this principle.	Prepare to hear the history of my life.
The final exam will be nothing more than a brief review.	Memorize the textbook.

a jaundiced eye

by susan stanley

Not meaning to be irreverent, but there are a few people on the campus who don't really care a whole lot about Hell Week and pledges and whether-or-not-a-sorority-is-a-fraternity. As a matter of fact, there doesn't seem to be much more involved in the dispute than personalities, as the big papers put it. So much for the Greek system.

This past week has been interesting. Due to my parents having to leave town suddenly, I became the mother for 4 younger siblings.

Those kids have it over most collegians I know, myself included. They get themselves up in the morning, fix their own breakfasts, pack up their peanut-butter and mayonaisse sandwiches and celery sticks, take to school for lunch.

But, basically, they are very nice. They flail out at one another for mostly physical reasons — like when a paper airplane hits its mark.

I should add that this is in a large part due to their upbringing. Both my parents are strict, but at the same time gentle with their children. They let them do pretty much what they want, such as in what to eat or wear, but they also establish rules, and make them stick.

The magic formula is to say, "Anyone who's old enough to be a Cub Scout is old enough to keep his fingers out of his nose . . ." (Or to stop turning somersaults. Or to stop jumping off the end of the couch.)

Saturday, our house was the scene of a birthday party for Mark, who was 8. Some 12 little boys from the neighborhood dropped in for two hours of screaming. No kidding — the fact that they pinned tails on the milk bottle and dropped clothespins on a donkey and ate ice cream and cake was secondary. Finally, inspiration hit . . . I dug up a green and white plastic whistle which, miraculously, was shriller than the shrillest little boy. The whole affair was a matter of endurance. Somehow, I won. At the end, two of them grinned and informed me that "we-don't-have-to-go-cuz - Mark-said-we-could stay." I coolly looked them in the eye and pulled Phyllis Diller's clincher: "I'm bigger than you are and this is my house and your coat is on Mark's bed." They left.

The parents will be home early this week, and I'm glad. I'm afraid that I'll look one of my history professors in the eye and say, "Stand up straight and take your hands out of your pockets! Now what was it you wanted to say?"

How on earth do people with REAL children go to college and retain their sanity?

P. S. Apologies to V.C., D. F. and B. H. K.

"PLUG IT IN NOW! WE DON'T WANT TO MISS THE SHOW."
